The military here is all volunteer. If they wanted war to end they could do it. No one else can. If we decide as an informed populace that conflict is best settled with bombs (insane) then send all able bodied young people, as determined by a lottery.

War, as practiced by the USA, is evil and perverse. You want to know who the grownups are? India, Brazil, Germany.

India is definitily growing up-- in population . The last count is 1.21 Billion people . Brazil is not exactly a fully developed country (relatively speaking) . . . Germany, OTH, well I didn't expect them to get involved in Libya at all . . . Memories of Africa Korps (1941-43) are still quite fresh !

The USA should not expel one (1) round of ammunition for any foreign conflict where we have not been attacked. Libya is not a threat to the USA or it's citizens. Close all of the overseas bases and tie all of the Aircraft Carriers up to their docks and let the sailors play baseball or something. The USA has plenty of problems at home and it is time to start to resolve some of them. Yes, I served at the time of Vietnam.

billmc@agora.rdrop.com

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown.
Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008 FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day; frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Please e-mail suggestions and corrections to billmc@agora.rdrop.com.

Phone line as SW antenna

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the | telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should | be rated 250 volts or higher.

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \ or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+

| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good | performance, are well-built and affordable:
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):

| Model 182A beverage matching unit

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

From: johns@uhunix.uhcc.Hawaii.Edu (John Shalamskas)
Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics,

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Toe Curl
This couple have just met in a bar, really hit it off and gone back to her place to have wild, passionate sex. After they have finished he lies back with a smug look on his face, "I guess that was just about the best sex you have ever had," he says. "What makes you say that?" asks the woman.

"Well, every time we did it, I couldn't help notice how it made your toes curl," he explains.

"Oh," says the woman, "that was just because most men wait to take off my pantyhose first."

3,Milking the Cow

Farmer John had just walked into the local watering hole, when who should he see, but his old friend Chris the tractor salesman sitting up at the bar. Chris looked so down and dejected, that John just had to go up and say something to him.

"Say, Chris, how ya doing? How's the tractor selling business these days?"

If Chris had looked sad before, at the mention of tractor sales, his face sank even more, and a tear came to his eye.

"John," he said, shaking his head, "I don't know what it is. I can't sell a tractor these days to save my life. I'll tell you, I just gotta sell one tractor and soon, or else I'll lose that dealership for good."

"Well," John said, taking the barstool next to him, "If you think you got it bad, I got it worse. Now you listen to this. I went out to the barn the other morning to milk Bessy. That ol' cow gets more ornery as the years go by. Anyway, no sooner did I sit down on the milking stool and get to work, but ol' Bes starts a slappin' me with her tail. After a minute or so, I got fed up with it, so I threw a rope up over the rafters, and tied ol' Bessy's tail to the rafters. Then I got back to work. I didn't even get two squirts into the bucket, when Bes gives me a kick. Knocked me clean off the stool! Boy, did that upset me! So I get me another rope an' tie Bessy's right hind leg to the side of the milking stall, and get a started trying to milk her again. Well by this time, Bessy's about livid, and she doesn't want any part of it, so she let's me have it with her other hind leg. I wasn't about to give in to this ol' cow, so I got me yet another piece of rope and tied up Bessy's left leg to the other side of the stall."

Just then John paused to take a sip his beer. Chris, distracted for a moment from his own troubles, asked John, "Well, did you finally get to milk her?"

"Well, yes and no, Chris. But I'll tell ya what, if you can convince my wife that I was out there to MILK that cow, I'll BUY a tractor from ya!"

32. OT: The Great Tea Party Depression Deepens (growth <3% isn't growth)

Consider that back in 1934, when it was emerging from the deepest hole of the Great Depression, the economy grew 7.7 percent. The next year it grew over 8 percent. In 1936 it grew a whopping 14.1 percent.

Add two other ominous signs: Real hourly wages continue to fall, and housing prices continue to drop. Hourly wages are falling because with unemployment so high, most people have no bargaining power and will take whatever they can get. Housing is dropping because of the ever-larger number of homes people have walked away from because they can't pay their mortgages. But because homes the biggest asset most Americans own, as home prices drop most Americans feel even poorer.

There's no possibility government will make up for the coming shortfall in consumer spending. To the contrary, government is worsening the situation. State and local governments are slashing their budgets by roughly $110 billion this year. The federal stimulus is ending, and the federal government will end up cutting some $30 billion from this year's budget.

In other words: Watch out. We may avoid a double dip but the economy is slowing ominously, and the booster rockets are disappearing.

So why aren't we getting the truth about the economy? For one thing, Wall Street is buoyant -- and most financial news you hear comes from the Street. Wall Street profits soared to $426.5 billion last quarter, according to the Commerce Department. (That gain more than offset a drop in the profits of non-financial domestic companies.) Anyone who believes the Dodd-Frank financial reform bill put a stop to the Street's creativity hasn't been watching.

To the extent non-financial companies are doing well, they're making most of their money abroad. Since 1992, for example, G.E.'s offshore profits have risen $92 billion, from $15 billion (which is one reason it pays no U.S. taxes). In fact, the only group that's optimistic about the future are CEOs of big American companies. The Business Roundtable's economic outlook index, which surveys 142 CEOs, is now at its highest point since it began in 2002.

Washington, meanwhile, doesn't want to sound the economic alarm. The White House and most Democrats want Americans to believe the economy is on an upswing.

The Wisconsin showdown is a result of an economic crisis precipitated by bankers, financial speculators and intentionally inept regulators. In line with Naomi Klein's argument in The Shock Doctrine, America's Great Recession served to destabilize the nation's economy so as to facilitate the systematic expropriation of the personal and social wealth of the middle-class. The effort by Wisconsin citizens opposing Gov. Walker's anti-labor campaign is an attempt to halt this ongoing plunder.

The Republican campaign being waged against the rights of middle-class Americans, particularly government employees, is surely part of a well-financed, orchestrated and coordinated campaign. If our legal system recognized class war as a crime, many of today's most reactionary but celebrated public figures and organizations would be arrested, tried and judged for the crimes they committed against the well-being the majority of Americas. Alas, class war in America is merely another name for libertarian freedom.

Republican forces are collaborating in the massive robbery of the collective wealth and precious self-esteem amassed by the America middle-class since it took shape following World War II. And ALEC is at the center of this political campaign. Its programs fashion the legislative agenda of class robbery that defines American politics today.

Easy. Because Boehner really wants what the tea party wants, as do the the republicons in general.

We really need to be careful we don't cut ourselves back into a recession, like they did in UKoGBNIaW.

Mowed my yard, before I got done with all of it, where the handle is bolted to the frame near the left rear wheel, the handle pulled loose.Old rusty lawn mower frame.I am going to see can I fix it with some big flat washers, I Know I can rig it up.The engine still runs real Good.It doesn't SMOKE at all either like that old country boy from Edwards,Mississippi! knows ALL About how to BREAK a Chainsaw.He BROKE! my Chainsaw! pawn shop lawn mower of his.He couldn't even find the Oil Drain Plug on his own pawn shop $65.00 lawn mower.Heh, his pawn shop lawn mower is self propelled.I know what happens when those little cheap ass transmissions wear out.

A Republican guy (he retired from the Army because of diabetes) used to live next door to me.The transmission on his Sears self propelled lawn mower conked out.He paid about $100.00 - $125.00 for a new transmission at the Sears service center that used to be on Greenway Drive, near that Dangerous Walmart store.I put the new transmission on his Sears lawn mower for him.

My two lawn mowers don't gots no steenkin transmissions.

Fog may have been a factor.This morning at about 7:20 AM in Bolivar County,Missy Sippi, an 18 wheeler collided with a school bus.A ten year old girl was killed, all of the other 29 school bus passengers were injurid, some seriously injuried.They were all rushed to University Medical Hospital in Jackson.The school bus had Stopped (unlike Dime Bag Laura Bush in Midland,Texas Failed to Stop at that STOP sign and she Killed her boyfriend!) at a Stop Sigh, then was moving out when the 18 wheeler truck driver saw the schoolbus.He hit the brakes, but just couldn't Stop in time.

This is backwater hick Missy Sippy, so Who Cares? I Guarantee you if that had happened in the 'Outside World',,, it would have been Instant Breaking News everywhere.Especially in New England.

The Golden Girls. ''The Actor''.The roommates swoon over a TV actor (Lloyd Bochner) who is appearing at their community theater.

Dude was sitting there (in that community theater) holding onto his jacket slung over his shoulder, sort of like Atlas Shrugged.He said, My name is Biff, I am a drifter from Lakahatchie,Mississippi and my story needs to be told.

HA! There is NO such place as Lakahatchie,Mississippi!

I've heard/read nothing but good about LandRover vehicles. Don't know about now, but BSA used to be one of the most popular motorcycles.

Liberty Net: March 26, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/04/liberty-net-march-26-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

LIBERTY NET check-ins continue to grow in number, and N2IRJï¿½s repairs to his receiving system allowed him to catch them with good quality despite the increase in atmospheric static that comes with the advent of Spring. The fourth simultaneous US war in the Middle East, started by a supposedly anti-war president, was a major subject of debate. Add in the comments on diverse subjects ranging from the humorous to the deeply philosophical and you end up with a most enjoyable and educational experience.

Hereï¿½s a small sample of some of the ideas that were discussed this time on the longest-running discussion net in amateur radio:

ï¿½ A Bush-appointed judge in Florida may be setting a precedent by allowing an issue in a $2 million lawsuit there to be settled via Sharia Law. Meanwhile, the Florida legislature is considering a law to prevent any judge from doing that. (20 minutes)

ï¿½ An recent initiative in California would require all public schools there to teach students to admire, even revere, homosexuals, transvestites, and their pathological behaviors. (23 minutes)

ï¿½ The regimeï¿½s ï¿½homeland securityï¿½ czar says that security on the US-Mexico border is ï¿½better now than it ever has beenï¿½ and that ï¿½the perception that border towns in Mexico are violentï¿½ is false. What universe is she living in? (29 minutes)

ï¿½ Why not let corporations put their logos on the backs of the Congressmen theyï¿½ve bought, just like they do with NASCAR autos? That would help us keep track of who works for whom as we watch the criminals on TV. (1 hour 27 minutes)

ï¿½ Will another financial collapse be engineered so as to pave the way for new legislation that would permanently enslave us to the banks, under the guise of protecting us from ï¿½financial terrorismï¿½? (1 hour 41 minutes)

ï¿½ In North Carolina, over 63% of school discipline problems are due to Black males, who comprise only 13% of the students. The NAACP thinks this is reason for investigation into possible ï¿½racism,ï¿½ though others suggest that it is the actual behavior and proclivities of Black males that are the cause of the disparity. But

ï¿½anti-racistsï¿½ are calling for punishment of school administrators who do not meet new ï¿½anti-disparityï¿½ laws. (2 hours 39 minutes)

ï¿½ Speaking of racial disparities, apparently ï¿½ for some reason or other ï¿½ a disproportionate number of Blacks are being arrested in New Orleans. But not to worry: The regime in Washington is going to ï¿½remakeï¿½ New Orleans police policies so that fewer Blacks are arrested and the disparity will simply disappear. (2 hours 46 minutes)

ï¿½ All politicians who aspire to national office in the United States must pay obeisance ï¿½ and promise monetary payoffs ï¿½ to the state of Israel. (3 hours 18 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to these Liberty Net recordings at home, at work, in your car, or while hiking or jogging with your portable mp3 player. And remember N2SAGï¿½s live feed during Net times that lets you hear the Liberty Net via multiple receivers ï¿½ and chat too.

Remember that all our Internet adjuncts are intended just to enhance the real purpose of the net, which is live and free communication between amateur operators. So please check in to the Liberty Net every Saturday night, usually to be found somewhere in that part of 75 meters above 3950 kHz ï¿½ we have to be flexible to evade jammers and intruders ï¿½ starting at 10PM Eastern Time. Once heard, the sound of W1WCRï¿½s distinctive and powerful signal is unmistakable and youï¿½ll have no trouble finding us and checking in.

Kudos and thanks go to Vic, W1WCR, for his decades of hard work for free speech and amateur radio!

How can something measured with instruments be a hoax? More likely, your source of scientific info is a hoax.

You seem to be an undiscriminating news consumer. Most of what they tell you is wrong, or out of context, etc. TV news is completely wrong almost always.

What's a hoax about organic food? Are you saying eating pesticides is good for you?

800 people reportedly massacred in Ivory Coast

From the Associated Press

8:24 AM PDT, April 2, 2011

JOHANNESBURG

More than 800 civilians have been killed in a western Ivory Coast town where hundreds of U.N. peacekeepers are based, the International Federation of the Red Cross said Saturday, but the U.N. military spokesman said he had no information about mass killings there.

The Roman Catholic charity Caritas put the toll at more than 1,000 dead, an estimate reached by its workers who visited the town of Duekoue on Wednesday.

Spokesman Patrick Nicholson said the killings occurred over three days in a neighborhood controlled by fighters loyal to internationally recognized President Alassane Ouattara, though it was not clear who the perpetrators were.

"The massacre took place in the 'Carrefour' quarter of town, controlled by pro-Ouattara forces, during clashes on Sunday 27 March to Tuesday 29 March," Nicholson said. "Caritas does not know who was responsible for the killing, but says a proper investigation must take place to establish the truth."

He said Caritas workers found that neighborhood filled with bodies of victims who died from gunshot wounds from small-arms fire or were hacked to death with machetes. He said those killed were civilians that included many refugees from fighting elsewhere in the country, where rival forces were battling over a disputed November election.

Caritas' investigation would indicate that people were killed at close quarters in a small neighborhood of a town of just 50,000 people as pro-Ouattara fighters began a two-pronged attack that brought them swiftly to Abidjan, the commercial capital and seat of power, within days.

Ouattara's government meanwhile denied its forces were involved in any atrocities including in western Ivory Coast, without referring to the latest allegations. Efforts to reach Ouattara's spokesman Saturday were unsuccessful. He did not respond to calls to his cell phone.

Previously, the United Nations put the death toll at 492 from four months of fighting to install rival leaders following disputed November elections.

Col. Chaib Rais, the U.N. military spokesman, told The Associated Press that nearly 1,000 peacekeepers at Duekoue "are protecting the Catholic Church with more than 10,000 (refugees) inside, and we have military camps in the area."

But he said "I have no special report of (mass killings). There was fighting two days before, on Sunday, and people were killed, but I cannot confirm those numbers."

Rais said there was fighting in and around the town on Sunday and Monday, between forces loyal to the rival leaders.

On Monday, fighters loyal to Ouattara said they took Duekoue. But Nicholson said interviews with survivors indicated pro-Ouattara forces had control of Carrefour neighborhood from Sunday.

ICRC spokeswoman Dorothea Krimitsas said "communal violence" erupted there, apparently on Tuesday.

International and Ivorian Red Cross teams visited Duekoue Friday and saw a "huge number of bodies," estimated at more than 800, she said. The trips by Caritas and the ICRC were separate and independent of each other.

"We think there is a risk that this kind of event can happen again and hope that by calling today again for protection for the civilian population, we hope that such events can be avoided in the future," Krimitsas told The Associated Press by phone from Geneva.

The area has been a hotbed for conflict between two tribes that support rival leaders vying for power in Ivory Coast, the democratically elected Ouattara and incumbent Laurent Gbagbo, who refuses to accept his defeat at November elections which he had postponed for years.

The International Organization of Migration said Friday that tens of thousands of refugees have overcrowded Duekoue and that others who had fled the violence in Duekoue "are now stranded along the route, in fear for their lives."

It said some of those slaughtered apparently were killed by "mercenaries" from nearby Liberia. Liberian mercenaries have been reported to be fighting for both Gbagbo and Ouattara.

The Roman Catholic bishop for the area, the Right Rev. Gaspard Beby Gneba of Man, said he was called by a priest from Guiglo, a town near Duekoue that also is sheltering refugees. He said the priest told him refugees were dying and that they were burying two people on Saturday.

Gneba said tensions in the area are a mixture of political, ethnic and land rivalry, aggravated by the influx of tens of thousands of new Ivorian refugees and long-established refugees from neighboring Liberia. In January, an unknown number of people were killed in violence in which some homes were torched and others looted, he said.

Gneba said more than 30,000 refugees had flooded the town of about 50,000 since January. Many are being sheltered at the Salesian priests' Mission of St. Theresa of the Baby Jesus.

"There's a traumatic humanitarian situation there," Gneba said. "They need everything: food, medicine, water, sanitation. People have lost everything, houses, clothes, they do not even have a mat to sleep on."

Rais, the U.N. colonel, said there are nearly 400 peacekeepers based at Guiglo who were doing what they could to help with water and food.

Ouattara's government, in a general statement Friday responding to allegations of abuses by Amnesty International, blamed any killings on Gbagbo forces acting as they retreated.

Ouattara had long tried to distance himself from the northern-based fighters taking up his cause who fought in a brief civil war almost a decade ago that left the country split in two. Those fighters were accused of many atrocities at the time.

But Ouattara's repeated calls for an international military intervention to force out Gbagbo and end the violence have gone unheeded. This week he appeared to change tack as the fighters began a swift advance on Abidjan, calling the rebels the "Republican Forces."

"The government firmly rejects these accusations and denies all implication of the Republican Forces of Ivory Coast in any possible violations," a government statement said Friday.

Human Rights Watch issued a statement Saturday saying it had documented abuses, with the vast majority perpetrated by forces loyal to Gbagbo against real or perceived Ouattara supporters, as well as against West African immigrants and Muslims.

"The documented abuses include targeted killings, enforced disappearances, politically motivated rapes, and unlawful use of lethal force against unarmed demonstrators," the statement said. "These abuses, committed over a four-month period by security forces under the control of Gbagbo and militias loyal to him, may rise to the level of crimes against humanity."

It was not immediately possible to reach Gbagbo or his ministers.

But the New York-based organization said atrocities committed by pro-Ouattara forces also could amount to war crimes and crimes against humanity, including three detainees burned alive and four whose throats were slit, all in Abidjan.

"Human Rights Watch has also received credible reports of abuses committed when Ouattara's forces took control of several towns in western (Ivory Coast)," it said.

In one village near Abidjan, the statement said, at least nine civilians were killed "in an apparent case of collective punishment against alleged civilian supporters of Gbagbo."

It added, "The killing of civilians by pro-Ouattara forces, at times with apparent ethnic or political motivation, also risks becoming a crime against humanity should it become widespread or systematic."

I would buy any lawn mower too, new or used, as long as it isn't Brit made lawn mower!

About half an hour ago, I was taking a real Good looksee at my old lawn mower.Where the left rear corner of the frame is rusted and rotted out, it's wayyyy to Shot for fixin.The engine still runs real Good though. I reckon next week I will check a few lawn mower shops and see if they have an old junk lawn mower (the blade on mine is about 19 or 20 sumpin inches long) they are going to throw away, or I can buy for a few dollars.

If it isn't a red color (my lawn mower is red) lawn mower frame, I will buy a cheap spray can of red paint.I wouldn't want that old country boy from Edwards,Mississippi knows all about chainsaws (he BROKE! my chainsaw!.He couldn't even find the oil drain plug on his own lawn mower either.He said, Show me where that oil drain plug is!) to see that I gots another lawn mower frame to replace my other lawn mower frame.

them " niggers " as Obama and friends think of them are not worthy of their support . they have nothing to offer in the way of glory or cash. Going there is not an option because it can not be won as them people are half animals and savages on top of that. They are far too violent to ever make peace. So Obama could not grab any victory for being the great humanitarian that brought peace and a good government to them .

There are some clone 'Jeeps' out there.Japan (I think Japan, maybe South Korea too?) and Philipines.They are NOT Real Jeeps though! Hotchkiss of France was manufacturing almost identical World War Two 'Jeeps' all the way up to around 1966, I think so.

There is another JJY transmitter (at a familiar 60KHz) in another part of the country . Time is immaterial (for now) in lieu of the clear and How do we define the term 'organic' ? Who knows what the so-called healthy-food and organically-grown-food is really naturally 'grown' ?

And how much of it is genetically modified ? And why so many US food products are banned in many countries ? And what makes you come to the

Yes. Windows OS uses the time zone setting for its own clock when it returns the local time to a program that asks for it. Most modern OSs

A guy who lives behind my house, works for the city, his back yard and that back yard next door to him is FULL of junk.About forty minutes ago he was airing up the tires on a couple of his old trailers.I asked him if he has an old junk lawn mower.He handed me one of his old junk lawn mowers.The frame on that old junk lawn mower is in real Good condition.All I need to do is transfer the engine (the engine bolt patterns look the same to me) and wheels from my old red rusted/rotted out lawn mower to that other lawn mower.It is sort of a dark green color.I will buy a cheap spray can of red paint so it will look like my old rusted/rotted out lawn mower frame.

World Wide Climate Change last millennium, this millennium, and next millennium is very real.

The 'suspect' part is that Mankind is presently the prime cause of it all today. Looking a hundred years back and a hundred years forward.

The highly 'suspicious' part is that the USA and Europe must do something about it : By Implementing Energy Use Cut-Backs and Energy Use 'Carbon' Taxes
-while- China's 1.3B and India's 1B don't have to do anything -and- the Rest of the World continues to Pollute unabated.

I worked at Alameda as a civilian in the middle 1970s. We had to remove our stuff from "our" pallets and restack it on Navy pallets. We also had to have 6 times the paperwork of any other customer. Great view of the Bay Area.

Nothing "kind" about man.

India and China are busting ass on renewables; we should be ashamed. The only people who think they aren't are the morons who get their news from TV and AM radio.

watch hours and hours of TV news. I made a leap in generality based on a

Cheapest gas today was $4.9558us

I don't know if I can run the generator or not.

Storm off the east and west coast.

Gas in the PI is way cheaper than on the ROK economy (about US$8/gal) Even on base, it's $3.66, lower than yours, but still ludicrous..

Man made is a 'myth'?

1) Are you denying the laws of chemistry by saying that carbon dioxide is not a greenhouse gas?

2) Are you denying that we (the human race) are continually putting more and more carbon dioxide in the atmosphere? (especially as China and India demand more cars and demand more electricity)

Sorry, but CO2 IS a greenhouse gas (which DOES cause warming -- that's why they call it 'greenhouse') and we ARE putting more and more CO2 into the atmosphere.

Sorry, tap dance all you want, but that sure looks man made to me.

It's just you. Looks more to me like her face has been given a touch up with photoshop. Look at the detail in the wall behind, then compare with the absolute lack of detail in her face. No wrinkles, no blemishes, no spots, nothing. Ordinarily I would say that she has heaps of face paint and blusher on her face but even this is way too overdone. Subtlety is the name of the game in the make up artists world.. The only example of face painting I've seen that comes close to this is in Chinese or Japanese weddings where the bride is made up so much that she looks like a ghost.

Thanks, guys for all the notifications.

I heard a pretty strong station at this time here near SF Bay, but I did not get the "call sign"; rather, I heard quick, muffled station IDs as "[?] Radio". It was the least audible portion of the broadcast.

Did anyone get a mailing address on this station? The music they played was distinctive...easy to QSL otherwise.

Thanks,
Bruce

Andrew Dice Clay visits Fink daily. They're known collectively as the 'Vitriol Twins'. Once a year they join dxAcehole in Holland MI. and burn crosses in front of the United Methodist Church.

Rumour has it that last year they vandalized a Mosque daycare, breaking

I've noticed that over the years. Roy H. Fink seems to be in the pay of Evil. He defends the indefensible on a daily basis. Then he pretends to preach love and understanding while spewing hatred towards anything his Masters direct him against. I wonder if they ever connected him to those

About 12 years ago at the Goodwill store that used to be on Palmyra Street in down town Jackson, I used to be there every morning (and so did a bunch of other people) when that store opened at 8:30 AM.One morning there was big fresh pile of dog poop right there almost in front of the front doors, you had to be real carefull you didn't step in it.One of those wimmins laid a piece of newspaper on top of that pile of dog poop.My little doggy always poops near the front edge of my front yard.I don't pick it up either, it breaks down and disappears down into the ground in a few days.

BBC America tee vee channel says How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb movie will be on thare at 3:00 PM.About seven or eight minutes from now.

So, you are suggesting we can just keep pouring an unlimited amount of CO2 into the atmosphere with impunity?

No, what he's saying is that the amount of man-released CO2 into the atmosphere is trivial compared to what is released from natural sources...most notably from volcanism.

One volcano is capable of releasing more CO2, as well as sulphurous oxides into the atmosphere than man has ever released.

Mt St Helens, for instance, released more trash into the atmosphere in 24 hours than all of mankinds pollution since he first stepped from the trees combined. Krakatoa orders of magnitude more.

Volcanism is a state of being on the planet. There are active volcanoes releasing greenhouse gasses every day of very year and have been since the planet cooled from the primordial mass.

Mankind's total historic contribution is not even a measurable fraction of that mass.

In fact, the greatest store of CO2 on the planet is in the seas. And when the planet warms, due to solar heating, there is a release of CO2. And it's been like this since the seas were formed. The dramatic hockey stick curve marking an increase in CO2 is a symptom, not a cause. If it were a cause, the period of extreme warming seen about the time of the launch of Leif Eriksson would have resulted in a peak temperature that would begun to approach Venus.

Here's something else. If CO2 were a cause of warming, the increasing biomass, human and animal, exhaling CO2, would have raised the temperatures sufficiently to release oceanic CO2 sufficient to abate the period of extreme cooling around the time of the Revolution resulting from the Maunder minimum, at which time the decrease of UV reaching the earth caused global cooling on an unprecendented scale, achieving some of the lowest average temperatures since the first half of the Quaternary Ice Age.

But why pick on CO2? It's total partial pressure in the atmosphere is, itself, trivial. And it's by far the least present greenhouse gas. Why not pick on the more plentiful greenhouse gasses. The primary greenhouse gas being water vapor, which has been more or less constant throughout the millenia since the first oxygen was released from the rocks. There's more water vapor in the atmosphere at any one moment, than there will ever be CO2 produced by man throughout his existence. And yet, we ignore that. Why?

Conveniently, because governments can't tax it.

It is a political convenience that this global climatic catastrophe has coincided with the rise in eco-political activism. And very convenient for those who can and will profit from this movement. I don't need to mention any names, but he's refused to debate this issue, made hundreds of millions of dollars dealing in approbations based on it, has sold carbon credits to himself, used energy at 10 times the rate of his own constituents, and has increased his own energy usage, and carbon output by an order of magnitude, while insisting at every turn that we have a moral obligation to curtail our own energy usage.

Sound familiar?

Meanwhile, the President you despise more than Satan, himself, Mr Bush, has built a home with such low ecological impact that it's considered the state of the art. Using 10th the energy of his neighbors, and 1/100th the energy of our favorite global warming evangelist. Look it up, if you have the nerve.

Moreover, the temperature hasn't risen, according to NOAA, since 1998. And in fact, 1997 and 1998, the years presented as the warmest in the 20th century, are actually not even close to the hottest year according to scientific meteorological records, as released by the US Government: 1934.

Meteorological normalcy is, and always has been a myth. The one constant in meteorology is: change. The one constant in climatic reality is: change.

Global temperatures vary with the sunspot cycle. There are also periodic variations in solar output (Sol IS a variable star), confirmed by core samples taken at the Earth's poles.

The variations in global temperatures have cyclic periods, and predictable patterns. And all of natural cause.

The only 'crisis' in the entire Global Warming debate is: How long will it be before, and what are the consequences after, the myth crashes around the proponents' ears.

If you want to really know what the long term picture of global climate really looks like, take a look at the history of where the world's wine has been grown. It's moving south. The great vintages at the south of France were transplanted from Scotland, where some of the greatest wines in earlier history have been produced. But no longer because of the cooling climate.

Eriksson names his landing in Nova Scotia Vinland because of the acres upon acres of natural grapevines that grew there. Miles upon miles of them.

But no more. Because of the cooling climate.

Look at where wine has historically been grown. You'll see a pattern of migration to southern latitudes, because the climates have cooled too much for wine grape production over the centuries.

Look it up.

Unless you're really less interested in the truth than pounding your fist in the face of those who live in a manner inconsistent with your preferences.

Which raises the REAL question.....

Do you object because they do it? Or because they can afford it?

Have a good evening Joe. You may begin your fantasy response, now.

I'm starting to think that Roy isn't actually as ignorant as he seems to be collective chains. Think about it... he doesn't take a "position" on most

This morning, I saw a Poole Cable-Comcast van with two Comcast dudes next door to doggy's couch.The same house where those divorced wimmins used to live.I think when one of those guys went up that ladder to the top of that pole up there, he disconnected them from Comcast.That very pretty woman over there, she used her mom's pickup truck and moved some things from that house.That dude who was shacking up with her, I haven't seen him over there since a week or two after Christmas.He got her pregnant about a year ago.I think her mom is taking care of her baby.She has another little girl about eight years old.Before that dude, there was another dude who was shacking up with her.He rode a Japanese motorbike all the time.It looked sort of like one of those dirt bikes.

Amplitude modulation has been used for many,many years : by shortwave broadcasters, by hams, by.....by..... everyone and his uncle . MW broadcasts are not restricted to just local consumption . BTW, where does Dave get 'His News' ???

1) What names (other than used here) have I mentioned ? 2) 70% seems like a fairly high figure,however, in reality it is probably a lot worse ! 3) The only way to watch an all-news channel (for hours and hours) is by becoming enamored by a particular newscaster (the wimmins factor !) 4) How does one 'make a "leap in generality" based on statistical likelyhood' ??? This sound very much like The 'Great Leap Forward' to me . . . I'm verry sorry to admit , but my opinions are not based on some maniac's unnatural decisions even when they run entire countries for generations . Period . 5)
MY 'misinformation' is a simple process of filtration of 'yellow journalism' and ALL the news under the sun . I have learned to read between the lines many moons ago 6) P.S. No comment .

It is becoming a serious problem over here in the last few years . The streets are full of dogs' excrements and it is simply dangerous to walk without looking under your feet ! Some dog owners think it is their constitutional right to pollute anywhere and everywhwere ...

We have reached the end-stage in the progression of corporate media. Cable News is 2 center-right providers (CNN, MSNBC), 2 totally fascist money channels (CNBC, FNC (demand it!)), and the 3 ring circus of bimbos and bullies known laughingly as Fox News. The poor casual user of news has no chance.

Insofar as democracy needs the 4th Estate to speak on behalf of the little guy, and insofar as much as the media is owned exclusively by the powerful, the USA is over. Done. Kaput. Al fine.

So if Gore is wrong why is Bush spending all that money to conserve energy? You can't complain about Gore's home office using ten times the energy of his neighbors than criticise him for buy carbon offsets for said energy use. It makes you look like an idiot who listens to Citadel right wing radio all day.

Bullshit. 2010 tied 2005, for the warmest year ever.

http://www.noaanews.noaa.gov/stories2011/20110112_globalstats.html

Only a moron would say something like "it's been cooling since 1998". The data needs to be at least 30 years to show a trend. That is standard accepted practice in the field.

"How much pollution does a volcano produce? Iï¿½ve heard that a volcanoes spew out as much pollution as all the cars that have ever been put on Earth combined but how much pollution does a volcano produce when it erupts? Darwin Teague

We asked our guest Marie Edmonds:

Marie- This is a very good question and it gives me an opportunity to dispel some of the myths about volcanoes and global warming and pollution. Volcanoes emit CO2 and SO2: carbon dioxide and sulphur dioxide are the main gases that might be construed to cause global warming or pollution. Volcanoes emit around 100,000,000 tonnes of CO2 a year. Compare that to man-made emissions of CO2 which comes to about 10,000,000,000 tonnes of CO2 per year. So volcanoes emit around 1/100th of CO2 that we do and are therefore insignificant in terms of global warming. Sulphur dioxide on the other hand, volcanoes emit around a tenth of the anthropogenic emissions of SO2. That forms regional smog."

I don't know where you are, but here in the USA "AM radio" refers to Standard Broadcast stations operating between 535 kHz and 1.71 MHz.

I get my global news from the BBC World Service. I get my local news

China is beating the U.S. in the race to supply clean-energy technologies to the world, helped by a government bank whose advisers include Henry Kissinger.

China Development Bank Corp., which listed the former U.S. secretary of state as an advisory board member in a 2010 bond prospectus, agreed last year to lend $35.4 billion to Chinese wind and solar power companies. The U.S. gave about $4 billion to their American competitors in grants and offered about $16 billion of loan guarantees. Adding in private investment, China also led.

CDB, which has almost twice the assets of the World Bank, is matching U.S. expertise with Chinese financing and manufacturing prowess to dominate a market both nations say is critical to their future. Chinese solar-panel makers such as LDK Solar Co. Ltd. were the biggest loan recipients and for the first time last year supplied more than half the global market, according to Bloomberg New Energy Finance, which began its annual conference Sunday in New York.

"What China's doing is really smart," said Jon Anda, vice chairman of UBS AG's securities unit in Stamford, Conn. "Without a clear policy path, we'll get crushed."

You don't need a U.S. birth certificate to obtain a U.S. passport.

Actually, there hasn't been a legally elected "US President" for over a century.

When the government brazenly violates its own structural rules, as has every "administration" since that of Abraham Lincoln, it cannot be regarded as legal or constitutional.

When the legislature of Maryland was arrested and imprisoned because they were about to "vote wrongly" -- when supposed "constitutional amendments" were enacted under force of military occupation and dictatorship, and near-total disenfranchisement, how can the resulting government be regarded as a continuation of the original? It simply can't.

The best and most honorable policy is to never refer to the current ruling structure as "the US government" or even "the federal government." Call it what it is: the illegal regime in Washington.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

A fairly good write up of the noise issue with solar regulators/chargers. There are a couple of things in the article I disagree with, but for the most part, it's what you'd expect.

I was surprised to see that noise/inerference certification is missing on a lot of the units.

In order to make official seal impressions visible our clerks and deeds registry folks, such as Gladys Worley, Jo Corn, or Elizabeth Digges, smeared the impression with black ink so that it would show up when photocopied for recording in the books held in the locked vaults at the courthouse, and on microfiche. Now these official documents are all digitized to save cramped courthouses a little space, but paper documents are still indispensable. After time-stamping and recording the original instrument, complete with the smears, is then returned to the homeowner, lienholder, testator, trustor, or . . .

So many birthers, so much inbreeding and stupidity. Neanderthal DNA yet lives! You just cannot school that neanderthal DNA. It's dumb as an ox.

Here - try this on for size. http://hvo.wr.usgs.gov/volcanowatch/2007/07_02_15.html

For starters. The evidence is abundant from one REAL scientific source after another that humans pump out orders of magnitude more GHG than volcanoes, even big ones.

You really should be able to run stuff in your house directly off the batteries. Eliminate the inverter completely. Eham dot com has some inverter reviews.

http://www.eham.net/reviews/products/74

I'm going to make my ham shack PV/battery, but all the cool stuff runs on 14 VDC already.

Here is something else that everyone should read. GHG studies and greenhouse warming concerns are not a Johnny-come-lately issue, nor are they near the beginning of a series of questionable experiments. The science has been studied to death for a century and half, and the vectors of virtually every experiment and investigation performed on this topic point toward human-induced global temperature increase and climatological disruption. The predictions of the models are coming true, accounting fully for every known natural and artificial source of climate change agents.

Summary

A U.S. passport is one of the most sought after travel documents in the world, allowing its holder entrance into the United States and many other countries. People attempting to obtain a U.S. passport illegally often seek to use the guise of a U.S. citizen to conceal their involvement with more serious crimes, such as terrorism, drug trafficking, money laundering, or murder. In March 2009, GAO reported on weaknesses in State's passport issuance process that could allow a terrorist or criminal to fraudulently acquire a genuine U.S. passport. Specifically, GAO easily obtained four genuine passports from State using counterfeit documents. In April 2009, GAO suggested that State take 5 corrective actions based on these undercover tests and State acknowledged those corrective actions. GAO was asked to perform additional proactive testing of State's passport issuance process to determine if it continues to be vulnerable to fraud. To do this work, GAO applied for seven U.S. passports using counterfeit or fraudulently obtained documents, such as driver's licenses and birth certificates, to simulate scenarios based on identity theft. GAO created documents for seven fictitious or deceased individuals using off-the-shelf, commercially available hardware, software, and materials. Undercover investigators applied for passports at six U.S. Postal Service locations and one State-run passport office.

State's passport issuance process continues to be vulnerable to fraud, as the agency issued five of the seven passports GAO attempted to fraudulently obtain. While there were multiple indicators of fraud and identity theft in each application, State identified only two as fraudulent during its adjudication process and mailed five genuine U.S. passports to undercover GAO mailboxes. GAO successfully obtained three of these passports, but State had the remaining two recovered from the mail before they were delivered. According to State officials, the agency discovered--after its adjudication process--that the two passports were part of GAO testing when they were linked to one of the passport applications it initially denied. State officials told GAO that they used facial recognition technology--which they could have also used during the adjudication process--to identify the two remaining applications. GAO's tests show that State does not consistently use data verification and counterfeit detection techniques in its passport issuance process. Of the five passports it issued, State did not recognize discrepancies and suspicious indicators within each application. Some examples include: passport photos of the same investigator on multiple applications; a 62 year-old applicant using a Social Security number issued in 2009; passport and driver's license photos showing about a 10 year age difference; and the use of a California mailing address, a West Virginia permanent address and driver's license address, and a Washington, D.C. phone number in the same application. These were fraud indicators that should have been identified and questioned by State. State also failed to crosscheck the bogus citizenship and identity documents in the applications against the same databases that it later used to detect GAO's other fraudulent applications. State used facial recognition technology to identify the photos of GAO undercover investigators and to stop the subsequent delivery of two passports but not to detect fraud in the three applications that GAO received, which all contained a passport photo of the same investigator.

Never seen a bad-papered one, fool?

http://rt.com/usa/news/fake-papers-can-get-you-an-american-passport-even-after-9-11/

A report issued by the Congressional Government Accounting Office reveals shocking details of how easily one can get a genuine American passport by applying using falsified documents at a passport office.

A draft of this report was obtained by The Associated Press.

A government investigator, in order to check the security in post-9/11 America, used documents, among others, from a child and a man who died over 40 years ago to obtain a passport – and succeeded in all his attempts.

After the 2001 terrorist attacks, security expenses in the US skyrocketed. Passport security was among many that were a particular focus since the suicide terrorists that attacked the WTC and Pentagon used fraudulent driver’s licenses to board the planes.

Now it looks like, to put it mildly, the measures taken were insufficient and over the past seven years U.S. officials have learned nothing about passport security and fraudulent documents.

How he did it

The investigator made four attempts to get a passport using a combination of fake documents and was granted a new passport in all four cases.

In one case, a combination of a Social Security number of a man who died in 1965, together with both a fake New York birth certificate and a Florida driver's license, made it possible to get an American passport in just four days.

Investigators gave it another try by providing the personal information of a 5-year-old boy to the passport application office, while pretending to be a 53-year old. He got his new passport in seven days.

The third time he made a two-step operation. He started by obtaining a genuine Washington D.C. identity card using fake documents – and he did it. Then he used the card to be issued a new passport in one day.

The final time the investigator used a forged New York birth certificate along with a fake West Virginia driver's license to complete an application for a passport which took a little more than a week – just eight days – for him to receive.

It is unnecessary to mention that fake passports from almost any country have a great value to the parties involved, from criminals to terrorists.

The U.S. intelligence officials from Immigration and Customs Enforcement state in the report that a badly forged American passport costs about $300 on the black market while the value of a top-quality forgery could be as high as $5000.

That could be because of who you are. But naturalized citizens who obtain U.S. passports can in now way have U.S. birth certificates.

Does not explain why Obama refuses to release his long form.

Or why Abercrombie went silent...

Nice spin though.

http://www.infowars.com/abercrombie-admits-failure-to-discover-obama-birth-certificate/

Veteran reporter Mike Evans has described in a radio interview how Hawaii Governor and close friend Neil Abercrombie was shocked at his failure to discover Obama’s birth certificate after using his power to search hospital records, an outcome that could seriously impact President Obama’s re-election campaign.

“Now he admits publicly that there is no birth certificate,” said Evans of Abercrombie.

Apparently he is so happy he survived the filth and muck of DC

But if the inverter is still charging the batteries in daylight, won't the RFI still be a potential problem in daylight?

Well, either that or a Naturalization Cerificate.

In the absense of any evidence of naturalization, I think we can safely assume that a US birth certificate was presented.

Here is something else that everyone should read. GHG studies and greenhouse warming concerns are not a Johnny-come-lately issue, nor are they near the beginning of a series of questionable experiments.
The science has been studied to death for a century and half, and the vectors of virtually every experiment and investigation performed on this topic point toward human-induced global temperature increase and climatological disruption. The predictions of the models are coming true, accounting fully for every known natural and artificial source of climate change agents.

http://www.aip.org/history/climate/co2.htm#survey

Bruce

Don't forget one very important (carbon sequestration) vector that man has most undeniably affected adversely: the forests. Massive deforestation cannot help but effect not only nature's largest vector for sequestration of atmospheric CO2, but also the production of O2.

You're making quite a presumption on blind faith (or hope). AFAIK, there has not been a FOIA or cognate request for a check of those papers.

My 1983 Dodge van, 318 engine, four barrel Carter Thermo-Quad carburetor, (it isn't a small van, about 18 feet long, about six and a half feet tall, I prefer BIG Vans, screw those dinky little vans! they aren't worth a Sheet!) this morning I went shopping, van's gas gage showed about one fourth of a tank of gas.I don't know just how accurate that gas gauge is and I don't want to find out by running out of gas.I stopped at a Shell gas station at the intersection of Highway 80 and Ellis Ave and I paid for $40.00 worth of gas.That brought the gas gage up to about half a tank of gas, I think it is a 24 gallon gas tank.$40.00 bought me about 11.1 gallons of gas.Some gas stations have gas at a cheaper price, about $3.44 at the Murphy USA gas station at the Dangerous Walmart store at the intersection of Greenway Drive and Highway 18.

Ahhhhh, back to lawn mowers.Tinnyrate, (if you can't figure out what Tinnyrate means, you need Kelp!) when I went to the Dangerous Walmart store for grub, I looked at the lawn mowers.20'' lawn mower priced at $125.00.I reckon I will buy one of those before I needs to mow my yard again.I will be sure it has an Oil Drain Plug too.I already had an old lawn mower in my van that my old buddy gave me this morning.He said it will run OK for an hour then it will quit running, probally has some trash in the fuel system.But, that lawn mower is too big and heavy for me to use where doggy's front yard dips downward to that drainage ditch by the side of the road.I could slip down and get my feets caught up under that lawn mower.I Likes my feets too much to let that happen.

Say cuzz, the EZ Pawn pawn shop at the corner of John R. Lynch Road and Highway 80 has an old eMac PC for sale.It has been sitting there for months, they have marked down the price several times before.When I looked at it this morning, the price was $169.95.It was turned on, blue screen with a large rectangular box said MAC OS System, Log in/Register, blah blah blah.Is it worth the money? If it is still sitting there a month from now, I might offer $140.00 Take it or Leave it.Somebody told me the Apple store will upgrade it for free.There is an Apple store about nine or ten miles North of doggy's couch.

There are Very Accurate devices which are available, and have been available since at least the 1940s, or earlier, for measuring Particulates/Particles in the Air.Measuring down to Millionths of size of Particulates/Particles, Volcanic Emmisions, other kinds of whatever in the Air.

I don't have a PhD in Scientific stuff.Ask some of those PhD Scientist people out there.

I will respond to you only because you are so wrong on so many points and with great reluctance (for reasons explained at the end of this epistle).

Also, let me preface my comments by saying that I never said warming was caused -solely- by man. Yes, there are natural cycles, but that is no reason for us to add fuel to fire, so to speak.

On 4/3/2011 9:28 PM, D. Peter Maus wrote:

Bzzzzt! Wrong!

1) Check the references from several previous posters. Man has generated a lot more CO2.

2) Look at the 50,000 year old ice samples containing carbon dioxide. At the most modern (latest) end of the curve, it is almost exponential and asymptotic. How odd that all that volcanic activity you talk about occurred at the very latest end of the curve. A reasonable, intelligent person would probably presume that volcanic activity occurred relatively evenly distributed throughout the 50,000 year period of the ice core samples.

> In fact, the greatest store of CO2 on the planet is in the seas. And

A positive feedback cycle. The warming caused by our putting CO2 in the atmosphere makes it warmer, which then according to you, would cause the oceans to release even more CO2.

> And it's been like this since the seas were formed. The dramatic hockey > stick curve marking an increase in CO2 is a symptom, not a cause.

Yes indeed a "symptom", a symptom of all the CO2 we are dumping in the atmosphere.

> It is a political convenience that this global climatic catastrophe has > coincided with the rise in eco-political activism.

Your point is non-provable -- it is like arguing which came first, the chicken or the egg. I contend the "eco-political activism" came about because a problem was detected and scientists are concerned enough to try and do something about it.

Bzzzt! Wrong again.

Not to mention any names either, "he" has REDUCED his energy usage by installing solar panels, a rainwater-collection system and geothermal heating. He also replaced all incandescent lights with compact fluorescent or light-emitting diode bulbs.

"Short of tearing it down and staring anew, I don't know how it could have been rated any higher," said Kim Shinn of the U.S. Green Building Council, which gave the house its second-highest rating for sustainable design.

His improvements cut the home's summer electrical consumption by 11 percent compared with a year ago, according to utility records reviewed by The Associated Press. Most Nashville homes used 20 percent to 30 percent more electricity during the same period.

Also, you are "conveniently" overlooking some other important facts.

1) "His" Nashville house is FOUR times the size of the average Nashville house, so it would be reasonable to assume that it uses at least four times the 'average' energy usage.

2) It is a DUAL purpose house, serving as an office for him, for his wife and both of their staffs. It may be just a wee bit disingenuous of you to compare a residential/commercial location to just a residential location.

> Meanwhile, the President you despise more than Satan, himself, Mr Bush, > has built a home with such low ecological impact that it's considered > the state of the art.

First, you are comparing W's -newly built- house to one that was built years ago. Again, a bit disingenuous of you to compare their energy usage on an equal basis.

As you are clueless as to why I despise your hero, let me give you a clue: I do not care in the least about W's electric bill. I DO loathe him for lying us into -two- bogus wars, pissing away a TRILLION dollars of our national treasury, the deaths of 5000 of our children and the horrible maiming and mutilation of thousands more of our children. Heck of a job, Georgie! (and to anticipate any comments, I don't think Obama should have gone into Libya).

Bzzzzt! Wrong yet again!

Per other posters (who quote Chapter and Verse), what you say is NOT true.

Finally, as to why I respond to you with great reluctance...

When your ex-wife first married you, she probably thought you were "Mr. Right"; however, she may not have realized at the time that your first name was "Always".

It's generally futile to deal with a person who thinks he is Always Right and who has no qualms about blurring the line between disingenuous and dishonest.

Why should he? Anyone who doesn't accept the documentation of the Great State of Hawaii wouldn't accept any other documents either.

Fuckem.

Anyways, the state says he was born there. The state registrar of whatever is a Republican. He was born in Hawaii, and anyone who cavils or truckles over that undisputed fact is clearly a nutter. Which is why I so blithely dismiss anything JSM posts as nutter stuff. Cause, well, he's a nutter.

Them guys at the State Department, see, they're better at catching cheaters than you, and they're smarter than you.

FOIA is irrelevant, as far as you're concerned. State's already done its job. Keep it separated, man -- they'll do the background checks, you pump the gas. It'll all work out.

The inverter only creates the Aztec pyramid looking "sine waves" for 117 VAC; batteries are charged through a voltage regulator. There are PV panels with regulators built-in, which can directly charge 14 VDC batteries.

BP is a giant fascist entity, more powerful than any government. The drilling rig was under command of BP. BP gave the orders to Halliburton to skip steps in the cementing of the well.

If you chronicle all the bad things about the modern oil business (coups, environmental degradation, Islamic revolution, etc.) you'll find BP's disgusting pink fingers.

It's not the mowing down, it's the burning of what's left. The burning destroys the topsoil. They can only use the cleared forest for a year or two, then they have to mow down another forest.

The slash and burn mentality is driven by demand for uniform beef.

Not true. The governor could not obtain the information he was seeking because it is confidential, even to him.

That said, a valid birth certificate has already been produced and proven to be genuine and valid for all purposes including Obama's 1961 live birth in Hawaii.

The true cost of gasoline should be included. No subsidies for oil companies.

Wealth redistribution is a side effect of democracy. If you make more poor people they will vote themselves more benefits paid for by higher taxes.

Life will redistribute one way or another (look at how ugly the European bluebloods are).

oh really, a genuine one just like the one the chinese leader who was

In May 1901, William Knox D'Arcy was granted a concession by the Shah of Iran to search for oil, which he discovered in May 1908.[17] This was the first commercially significant find in the Middle East. On 14 April 1909, the Anglo-Persian Oil Company (APOC) was incorporated as a subsidiary of Burmah Oil Company to exploit this.[17] In 1935, it became the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company (AIOC).[17]

After World War II, AIOC and the Iranian government initially resisted nationalist pressure to revise AIOC's concession terms still further in Iran's favour. But in March 1951, the pro-western Prime Minister Ali Razmara was assassinated.[18] The Majlis of Iran (parliament) elected a nationalist, Mohammed Mossadeq, as prime minister. In April, the Majlis nationalised the oil industry by unanimous vote.[19] The National Iranian Oil Company was formed as a result, displacing the AIOC.[20] The AIOC withdrew its management from Iran, and organised an effective boycott of Iranian oil. The British government – which owned the AIOC – contested the nationalisation at the International Court of Justice at The Hague, but its complaint was dismissed.[21]

By spring of 1953, incoming U.S. President Dwight D. Eisenhower authorised the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) to organise a coup against the Mossadeq government with support from the British government.[22] On 19 August 1953, Mossadeq was forced from office by the CIA conspiracy, involving the Shah and the Iranian military, and known by its codename, Operation Ajax.[22]

Mossadeq was replaced by pro-Western general Fazlollah Zahedi[23] and the Shah, who returned to Iran after having left the country briefly to await the outcome of the coup. The Shah abolished the democratic Constitution and assumed autocratic powers.

After the coup, Mossadeq's National Iranian Oil Company became an international consortium, and AIOC resumed operations in Iran as a member of it.[20] The consortium agreed to share profits on a 50–50 basis with Iran, "but not to open its books to Iranian auditors or to allow Iranians onto its board of directors."[24] AIOC, as a part of the Anglo-American coup d'état deal, was not allowed to monopolise Iranian oil as before. It was limited to a 40% share in a new international consortium. For the rest, 40% went to the five major American companies and 20% went to Royal Dutch Shell and Compagnie Française des Pétroles, now Total S.A..[25]

The AIOC became the British Petroleum Company in 1954. In 1959, the company expanded beyond the Middle East to Alaska[26] and in 1965 it was the first company to strike oil in the North Sea.[27] In 1978 the company acquired a controlling interest in Standard Oil of Ohio or Sohio, a breakoff of the former Standard Oil that had been broken up after anti-trust litigation.[28]

It continued to operate in Iran until the Islamic Revolution in 1979. The new regime of Ayatollah Khomeini confiscated all of the company’s assets in Iran without compensation, bringing to an end its 70-year presence in Iran.

In addition to all of this, Joe, it's worth pointing out that isotopic carbon studies of CO2 in the atmosphere and oceans STRONGLY point toward a large increase in human-generated carbon emissions. The factual evidence in favor of human-induced climate change is overwhelming.

You fucking stupid, lying, verminous old alleged "ex-field commander" POS:

http://www.wnd.com/?pageId=127362

An archive search shows the question of McCain's birth certificate and his eligibility to be president was actively pursued by Democratic Party activists and the mainstream media in the run-up to the 2008 presidential election, despite the ridicule now heaped upon those questioning Obama's qualifications under Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution.

In an article published Feb. 28, 2008, months before McCain was nominated for president by the Republican Party, FactCheck.org, at the very center of Obama's defense against eligibility questions, was itself raising them about McCain.

In a piece that led off with the question, "How can Panamanian-born McCain be elected president?" FactCheck.org conceded McCain did meet the natural-born citizen requirements. But the website qualified its answer, stating that if McCain did win the presidency, the issue could be challenged in court.

On Feb. 28, 2008, Carl Hulse wrote a New York Times article, "McCain's Canal Zone Birth Prompts Queries About Whether That Rules Him Out."

"To date, no American to take the presidential oath has had an official birthplace outside the 50 states," Hulse wrote.

Picking up on the Times piece, MSNBC.com ran a feature on the same day posing the question, "Born in the USA?"

The Wall Street Journal the same day published a Law Blog column asking:
"Does John McCain Have a Birthplace Problem?"

CBS News speculated McCain's eligibility question "could conceivably end up in before the Supreme Court," adding the comment, "And you thought counting chads was a circus."

The next day, the Times of London published a similar piece, "McCain's Panama birth prompts eligibility probe by his campaign."

NBC correspondent Pete Williams also published a piece Feb. 29, 2008, on the MSNBC website, "McCain's citizenship called into question."

"Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., and his advisers are doing their best to brush aside questions – raised in the liberal blogosphere – about whether he is qualified under the Constitution to be president," Williams wrote. "But many legal scholars and government lawyers say it's a serious question with no clear answer."

On April 10, 2008, ABC reporter Jake Tapper published a piece on the ABC News website in which he noted the Constitution "does not define 'natural born citizen,'" pointing out that "McCain was born in the Panama Canal Zone to parents who were U.S. citizens, but some scholars have questioned that it suffices."

Then, on April 11, 2008, the Wall Street Journal's Law Blog published a piece noting that Sens. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., and Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., introduced a non-binding resolution expressing McCain qualifies as a natural-born citizen under terms of the Constitution.

The Leahy-McCaskill resolution, ultimately passed by the Senate unanimously was co-sponsored by Sens. Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton, who at the time were competing for the Democratic Party's presidential nomination.

Even this was not enough to stop liberal activists and the mainstream media from continuing to keep alive questions about McCain's eligibility.

In a Washington Post story May 2, 2008, reporter Michael Dobbs questioned whether the Senate's unanimously passed resolution was sufficient to settle the matter of whether McCain was a natural-born citizen eligible to be president.

Dismissing the Senate resolution, Dobbs wrote that the Senate vote "is simply an opinion that has little bearing on an arcane constitutional debate that has preoccupied legal scholars for many weeks."

Dobbs noted at the time the article was published "three pending cases are challenging McCain's right to be president" because even though both his parents were U.S. citizens, his father was in the Navy, and McCain was born at the U.S. Naval Station based in Coco Solo in the Panama Canal Zone on Aug. 29, 1939.

While acknowledging that a senior official of the McCain campaign had shown reporters a copy of McCain's birth certificate issued by the Canal Zone hospital – something the Obama presidential campaign and presidency have so far refused to do – he questioned why McCain did not release the birth certificate to the press generally.

In addition to media scrutiny, McCain testified before a U.S. Senate committee and produced his long-form birth certificate for inspection.

On May 12, 2008, PolitiFact.com, a website that has dismissed questions about Obama's eligibility, published an article authored by Robert Farley, "Was McCain born in the USA?"

Noting that the question of McCain's eligibility is "rooted in legal opinions," not in facts, PolitiFact.org begged off giving McCain's eligibility question a truth rating, claiming its "customary True-False ratings don't quite fit here."

PolitiFact repeated the Washington Post complaint that McCain had not released his hospital-generated birth certificate publicly, opting instead to "let a Washington Post reporter take a peek at it."

BULLSHIT LIE!

http://www.infowars.com/abercrombie-admits-failure-to-discover-obama-birth-certificate/

Veteran reporter Mike Evans has described in a radio interview how Hawaii Governor and close friend Neil Abercrombie was shocked at his failure to discover Obama’s birth certificate after using his power to search hospital records,

Evans’ revelations contradict official claims that Abercrombie abandoned his search for birth records relating to Obama because of privacy laws that bar him from disclosing an individual’s birth documentation without the person’s consent.

Abercrombie had used his power as Governor to search records from all the hospitals where babies were being delivered at the time of Obama’s birth and that, “There is no Barack Obama birth certificate in Hawaii – absolutely no proof at all that he was born in Hawaii,” said Evans, pointing out that Abercrombie purposefully conducted the investigation to try and quash claims that Obama was not born in the United States.

The peak power tracking chargers/regulators have the 'slice and dice' circuitry in them. The idea being that you can get more power out of a 130 volt panel connection than a 17 volt one.

If you connect a 17 volt panel to a 12 volt battery, it's not too bad for losses. Try it with a 34 volt panel and you lose half the output, as the panel output voltage gets reduced to that of the battery.

Voltage does not indicate state of charge well.

You use Mozzilla and haven't learned to thread.

Try Outlook Express so you can understand threading maybe.

I have been noticing many threading errors everywhere on Usenet lately.

People with OE don't seem to have the petty problems with subject

mixed posts, random pieces and many other problems all the nonOE

Bottom posting has been obsoletely by threading browsers.

I think outside opinions are worth much more than sales hype from the company that made the product.
Referring to factory charging specifications for the batteries they make

This is power grid induction through capacitive proximity

You can get fooled with another ground in the house finding it's way back to the transformer neutral.

A thought I have is rain water from a roof on a three story home through a micro-turbine.

Setback thermostats only work efficiently for small differentials, dependant on the time duration.

Breakers are good for one time usage of one fault and then they need to be replaced for any warrantied usage.

If the breaker interupts a fault, it should be replaced.No warranty will honoured after that.

I don't have a link at this time

There are no hydrogen molecules in water and the oxygen in water isn't flammable either.

Water is inert and contains no energy to be used. Get some basic chemistry first.

Quite simply put, for some of the boneheads here.

NiCads and NiMh batterries are designed to take a current charge forever.

Oh yeah, I can charge a battery and use it six months later fully charged. The nicads will be cooked because you keep them on charge, just in case you need them but when you remember them six months later they are cooked and won't last 5 minutes in the camera.

It takes a complete idiot to deny they can short out all by themselves. Three, loose in a bag can short themselves out.

Did they have electricity back in 1994?

I have been around so long with this stuff I believe I invented the diode in 1941 but I am not familiar with the solar panel usage requirements of them. (no P & N substrate explanations please. I wrote the GE manual...LOL)

NOTE: do not pass ground wires through metal holes or cable clamps with two screws on a metal surface.

There is NOT enough energy in a lightning bolt to power your house for more than an hour...if that. Do the math.
The figures escape me but let's say it puts out a roughly MWatt of power for 100 nanoseconds?

100 x 10-9 x 1 x 106 / 3600 (sec/hr) = 0.0027 wH
oooops.... Wouldn't light your home for a 1/2 second.
OK..OK.. multiply the figures time 100 or 1000. Now it would light a 100W bulb for 1 second.

The IEEE-232 standards were never followed or known by many.

Did you know, NO, I repeat NO death has ever been related to PCBs?

Insulated square copper wires from a dry transformer are not 99% copper and take a lot of work to remove the insulation.

I have tonnes of insulated copper wire if you want it. I think you could almost have for the picking it up. How many bins can you take per year

50 lbs? We have it by the bin full. Mostly #6 to 650 MCM. I beleive you would have to leave a bin and then pick it up full later to compete with the current scrapper.

Can't this tranformer be used by somebody to generate a second 120V from a single phase 120V inverter? It sounds pretty beefy.

BTW: once you knock the wedge out of the coil form the laminations will be easier to get out. This keeps them from buzzing until the varnish and other impregnations go into it.

Gel cell won't cut it when it comes to putting out 100A or more. They cook in one spot and the rest of the electrolyte doesn't circulate fast enough.

There is nothing standard about USanian measurements. They changed their sizes to avoid trading with the rest of the world. This worked for a few centuries but the rest of the world moved on to the metric system to avert the confusion the US caused.

Ever put your ohmmeter (do I need to explain an ohmmeter also?) across a capacitor? It measures infinity after charging to the supply voltage because the electrolyte is an insulator.

Electrolytes are not conductors of electricity in a capacitor.

If the electrolyte conducted it would be a resistor.

Aristotle:"Most men are such slaves to passion they'd do better in the hands of a more rational master." Politics is all about who the master is, more rational or not.

Its not about what should happen, never has been. Machiavelli says that when the middle class no longer feels it has an investment in the system left, there's a revolution. Demagogues will arise from among them who will seize aristocratic assets to gratify the instinct for revenge.
While revenge is sweet, its not nutritious, and they soon come to regret.

Jared Diamond shows how when the resource base is maxed, rather than cutting back to buy time to look for alternatives, elites simply increase exploitation of everyone else. This keeps the level of their perks increasing, giving the illusion 'progress' continues. Until somebody snaps and its time to drag the rich bastards out to be butchered.

Lack of courage ? Germans ? They were known as mighty warriors since the Ancient Roman days. What about Erwin Rommel in Libya ? Or Paul von Lettow-Vorbeck (who told Adolf to go fk himself) ?

Hi Burr!

Feeling better than I probably have a right to! School's keeping me busy - teaching six classes across two different univerities and starting my coursework on a doctorate in Business Management. My daughter graduates at the end of this month with dual degrees in Business Management and Logistics Distribution.

Trying to find time to spend with my radios,

Mike

Seriously. I used to put the mower on its side to drain the oil. It's

NO! NO! NO! Any Lawn Mower I buy, Absolutely MUST have an Oil Drain Plug on the bottom of the engyne! That is a MUST! I will NOT! buy a Lawn Mower if it doesn't have an Oil Drain Plug, PERIOD!
Some Lawn Mowers/ (Sissy Ass ''lawn mowers'') Engynes don't even have an Oil Drain Plug, some of those Nuke Honda ''lawn mower'' engynes don't have an Oil Drain Plug.Would you buy a car that doesn't have an Oil Drain Plug? If you are going to change the Oil, do it the Right Way.

Couple of days ago when I was looking at them Lawn Mowers on display on the rack up there, at the Dangerous Walmart store, I made Sure the one I want has a Real Good Briggs & Stratton engyne with an Oil Drain Plug up under there.

We gots Von Ryan's Express movie on the Fox Movie Channel right now.Then I needs to buy a few more 4' by 8' sheets of plywood for my attic at the Lowe's store, and then across Highway 18 from the Lowe's store to the Dangerous Walmart store and buy me a new 20'' Lawn Mower.I can put the Lawn Mower (still in the box) on top of the plywood.That's why I Likes my Big Ass 1983 Dodge Van.I can put 14' long boards in my van and close the rear doors.You can't do that with one of those little bitty Dinky Sissy so-called ''vans''.

Only Mountains I ever climbed was when I was riding in my dad's car in Wyoming and Montana.That means I am a Wyomian and a Montanan.
I am no more Caucasian than the Man in the Moon! Neither are YOU.

They have one of those Boat thingys over there at the old Mississippi River Bridge between Missy Sippy and Louisiana.The Boat has a derrick on it and a big chain.They are working on sawing that old Barge in half (raising that chain up and down under/around the hull of that Barge) so it will either sink or move on down the River away from the Bridge.I have seen some people doing the same thing before on an old Ship, on one of those tee vee channels.

Yes. Just before 1900UTC. I noticed the K-index had gone to 6, so I went up to 10 meters and talked to a station in Italy and one in Haiti around 28.5 MHz. When those faded, I dropped to 15 meters and heard the Angola station coming in. I talked to him after about 3 calls (stopped during my contact to give out QSL info). He was a good operator. He tried to get as many NA stations as possible while the opening lasted. He mentioned that he was not hearing Europe very well at the time.

Doggy just now took me out in the front yard about 15 minutes ago.I saw two Jet Airplanes heading North, about one and a half, perhaps about two miles distance from each other.First I have ever seen that around here before, looking up at the Sky from doggy's front yard.Regular Contrails that were fast disappearing, I could see a blinking light from one of those Airplanes.I saw another Contrail, from East to West, oviously whatever Airplane that made that one had passed on by earlier than the two Northbound Airplanes.

The birthers have spent millions litigating Barack Obama's citizenship, and yet I have it from a high-ranking officer in the Secret Service that the President personally has not spent one cent defending the birther lawsuits.

That stands to reason. The wackjob birthers bear the burden of proof , and not one of them has gotten past a motion and order for dismissal in the trial court.

You are confusing the two terms:
Nier is not the same as Nia.

For example, a white man that calls an African American a Nier means it as a insult. But a calling a black man a Nia, such as "My Nia" is a term of endearment 95% of the time. So BO is "My Nia prez."

YMMV. IMHO.

Liberty Net: April 2, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/04/liberty-net-april-2-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THERE SEEM TO BE more new stations checking into the Liberty Net every week; why not join them? Getting an amateur radio license is simpler than ever before, and inexpensive training courses and classes are widely available.

Here are just a few of the issues discussed and debated this week on amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net:

ï¿½ Why is the regime in Washington supporting al-Qaeda in Libya but supposedly fighting it in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Iraq? (14 minutes)

ï¿½ One of the most bizarre twists in the latest illegal war is that the US troops who were training Qaddafiï¿½s forces had to be quickly evacuated so that other US troops could be brought in to attack those same forces. (18 minutes)

ï¿½ Teachers and principals in Washington, DC have been getting $8,000 to $10,000 bonuses ï¿½ with some $75 million in total awards ï¿½ for producing ï¿½improved test scores.ï¿½ But now an investigation has revealed ï¿½ surprise, surprise ï¿½ massive falsification and cheating on the tests in this nearly all-African school system. (21 minutes)

ï¿½ The best US foreign policy would be that advocated by W1WCR: Get the US out of the Middle East and get the Middle East out of the US. (30 minutes)

ï¿½ Why ï¿½ immediately before the current economic crash ï¿½ was the Federal Reserve lending huge sums to foreign banks? Could it be that some of these banks are among the secret stockholders of the Fed (the private ownership of which needs to be more widely known)? (44 minutes)

ï¿½ ï¿½Outserveï¿½ is the name of a new magazine which is being marketed to military personnel who are homosexuals or members of other abnormal ï¿½sexual minorities.ï¿½ (1 hour 19 minutes)

ï¿½ The current Republican talk of a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution is nothing but grandstanding. If the criminals in Washington refuse to obey the Constitution now, why would they suddenly start after the (very unlikely) passage of such an amendment? (1 hour 35 minutes)

ï¿½ With the value of derivatives, even after the crash, being put at about $4 quadrillion (which is four thousand trillion or four million millions!), why not just put a tax of 1% on them and totally eliminate all taxes on individuals and businesses? (2 hours 40 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the recent hysteria about ï¿½thousands of nuclear bombs hidden all over the USï¿½ a story planted by a domestic or foreign intelligence agency ï¿½ or by some other agent of a foreign power, like the ADL? (2 hours 44 minutes)

Donï¿½t be shy ï¿½ check in to amateur radioï¿½s historic Liberty Net, established in 1974, every Saturday night ï¿½ on some clear frequency near 3950 kHz SSB starting at 10PM Eastern Time. Recently the net has been meeting above 3960 to avoid the BBCï¿½s deplorable digital transmissions (which sound like broadband white noise) on 3955. And check out our Internet feeds which can help you copy and communicate with weak stations.

Kudos and thanks go to Vic, W1WCR, for his decades of hard work for free speech and amateur radio!

Gregg IF'N You Ain't an African-America
either way It's "The-N-Word" - eod ~ RHF
You can refer to President Barack H. Obama
as a African-America
-or- call BHO a Black-Man
-or- even Mixed-Race et-al...
BUT Using "The-N-Word" with-disrespect-to BHO is simply and clearly a Racist Insult [.]
I may 'clown' Prez "BO" {Obama} and call the Office the US Prez-A-Duntz -but- 'clowning' is
'clowning' just like those who 'clowned' former president Bush by calling GWB "Scrub" and use a Image of a Chimpanzee to portray him.
BUT YOU DO NOT REFER TO THE US PRESIDENT
AND USE "THE-N-WORD" -cause- IT IS CLEARLY
RACIST - IMHO ~ RHF

War is a necessary evil. The problem with the west is we don't fight them right any more. During WWII the west killed millions of civilians to win their campaigns. However now we try to fight them with one arm tie behind are backs. For example, when we invaded Iraq we should have converted the population to Christian and those that refused to convert would have been allowed to starve to death. A new generation of Christians would develop within thirty years to replace the deceased.

Mike, that's great.
So happy for your daughter I know how happy you are when your children do well! I also had to get/push my children to get multiple degrees, one is not enought anymore. Even a Bachelor Degree is not much in today's times!

And you, WOW I can say I knew him when. I'm so happy you are doing so well and happy with your life. Glad to see you busy, when you want something done ask a busy man to do it then get out of the way.

I stay so busy in retirement I don't know how I ever had time to work. I sent you another email and you didn't answer a few weeks ago!!!!

Maybe you need to send me your email address again.

Have a happy,

Feeling better than I probably have a right to! School's keeping me busy - teaching six classes across two different univerities and starting my coursework on a doctorate in Business Management. My daughter graduates at the end of this month with dual degrees in Business Management and Logistics Distribution.

Yeahhhh.Last time I went to a Sunflower food store was back around 1990 when I drove a Pony Express Courier Ford van.There was a Sunflower food store in Winona,Missy Sippy, some ot those other little towns too.There are no Sunflower food stores in Jackson, far as I know anyway.

Many years ago, Sunflower food stores had a thingy on tee vee on Friday or Saturday evenings around 6:00 PM.People from all over Missy Sippy would write their names and addresses on a piece of paper and snail mail it to a Jackson tee vee station.Somebody would spin a little wire cage around and around and somebody else would reach in that wire cage and pull out and read that piece of paper on tee vee.Whoever won would win a free weeks worth of food and some money.Ask your buddy Bob Dobbs if he remembers that.

either way It's "The-N-Word" - eod ~ RHF
You can refer to President Barack H. Obama
as a African-America
-or- call BHO a Black-Man
-or- even Mixed-Race et-al...
BUT Using "The-N-Word" with-disrespect-to BHO
is simply and clearly a Racist Insult [.]
I may 'clown' Prez "BO" {Obama} and call the Office the US Prez-A-Duntz -but- 'clowning' is
'clowning' just like those who 'clowned' former president Bush by calling GWB "Scrub" and use a Image of a Chimpanzee to portray him.
BUT YOU DO NOT REFER TO THE US PRESIDENT

EITHER N word! By ANYONE!

The lights are dimmed at the in-house research unit known as SIP, for Servicio de Informacion Programativa. As many as 20 people are gone, including those in the call center. EVP David Gleason and Senior Vice President Ismar Santa Cruz are no longer in those positions. Lead Univision principal Haim Saban may be planning to take Univision public again, after a very expensive going-private deal with Jerry Perenchio four years ago. If they’re doing this purging of the payroll to pump up the cash flow, it’s a risky short-term strategy. The Hispanic Programming Board of Radio-Info.com began talking about the bloodbath soon after it began yesterday at 10am Pacific time.

When an entity or person works in the dark, with that much secrecy, it should give all of us pause.

In truth, Intelligence needs to work outside the range of public vision to be effective. But we have to trust that it works to our benefit, and that it works within the limits of good conscience. Trouble is, we can't know, once the shrouds of secrecy are up, whether either of those things are true.

And History has not borne good witness.

It is of great ongoing concern that our Middle East policy in general.

- The birthers have spent millions litigating Barack Obama's
- citizenship, and yet I have it from a high-ranking officer in the
- Secret Service that the President personally has not spent one cent
- defending the birther lawsuits.
- That stands to reason. The wackjob birthers bear the burden of
- proof , and not one of them has gotten past a motion and order for
- dismissal in the trial court.

Oops ! : That will all change this 2012 Election Cycle.

WHY : US President Obama May Not Be On-the-Ballot
in All 50 States in 2012

Your so-called 'Birthers' are ready to Challenge the Obama Birth Certificate Issue in each and Every US State in in the Primary {Party} Elections; and again in the State General Elections too.

HOW : US President Obama May Not Be On-the-Ballot
in All 50 States in 2012

'Birthers' are right now Registering as Democrats so that they have Legal Standing in the individual State
Primary {Party} Elections to Challenge the Obama
Birth Certificate Issue and Natural Born Citizen Status.

MAYBE : US President Obama May Not Be On-the-Ballot
in All 50 States in 2012

That is 50 individual US States with 50 Secretaries of State {Election Officials} each with the Independent Duty, Responsibility and Legal Authority to make a Determination whether Obama can Legally "Be" on the Ballot in their respective US States.

-and- Some of those 50 State Secretaries of State {State Election Officials} are Elected Republicans
-with- Elected Republican Governors
-plus- State Legislatures Controlled by Republicans
-also- State Majority Elected US House Members
-that-something-extra- Two Republican US Senators
-oops- Conservative {Republican} State Judges & Courts too

WHAT IF : US President Obama May Not Be
On-the-Ballot in All 50 States in 2012

Remember the US Presidential Election is really 50 Individual, Independent and Separate State Elections that is then Aggregated by the Electoral College.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Electoral_College_%28United_States%29

OOPS : US President Obama May Not Be On-the-Ballot
in All 50 States in 2012

Second Each of these US State Electoral College Delegations has the Right to Put any and all Election Issues before the Confirmation Vote by the Joint Session of the US Congress. All it takes is One (1) US House Member and One (1) US Senator to put any Issue to a Vote. -wrt- The Obama Birth Certificate Issue and Obama's Natural Born Citizen Status.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Electoral_College_%28United_States%29#Joint_session_of_Congress_and_the_contingent_election

OMG : US President Obama May Not Be On-the-Ballot
in All 50 States in 2012

NOTE : It is Only the US House of Representative Members who get to Vote in the 'Contingent' Presidential Election by House -so- Who Controls the US House in 2012 is another 'key' to who may be or not be Found to be first 'Qualified' and second "Elected" the next US President in 2012. -yeah-political-reality-sucks-

I never have ever felt any Earthquakes here in Missy Sippy.I Hope I haven't spoken too soon about that.

December of 1961, I was working at a factory in Saint Louis.I was living at the old Kingsland Hotel that used to on Delmar Blvd, out there near University City.

One time when I was in my hotel room, there was a 'shake' that lasted about two or three seconds.That was the only Earthquake I have ever felt before.

OK - recall that it is an inverted L 30 feet high and 65 feet long, fed by ~40 feet of coax in two sections with both a grounded matching transformer at the base and a 1:1 grounded line isolator where the coax enters the house (which explains the two sections, one either side of the isolator). It runs above the rooftop in a nearly N-S direction.

It's quite good - on its own it transmits less noise to the radio than the one it replaces, with a stronger signal, and it often provides a good match with the DX-Ultra as a phasing antenna for noise reduction. Using these two combined, I have been able to capture logs of audible stations that before were either in the mud or just faint carriers.

I am very pleased with it; and I would not mind having another identical to it to run through the MFJ-1026 for noise reduction. In order to to do the hardest DX work, though, I will need to get away from town.

in All 50 States in 2012

Your so-called 'Birthers' are ready to Challenge the

in All 50 States in 2012

'Birthers' are right now Registering as Democrats so that they have Legal Standing in the individual State
Birth Certificate Issue and Natural Born Citizen Status.

MAYBE : US President Obama May Not Be On-the-Ballot
in All 50 States in 2012

That is 50 individual US States with 50 Secretaries of

The SWL Antenna Weather Report : 7 APR 2011

This Morning by 9 AM we had ~4-Inches of Snow on the Ground : One Inch of Snow on the Bare Copper Stranded Wire and Three Inches of Snow on the Multi-Stranded Wire Then Burned Off by Noon

Started all over again at 5 PM and once again we have One Inch of Snow on the Bare Copper Stranded Wire and Three Inches of Snow on the Multi-Stranded Wire with 4 more Inches on the Ground in 2-Hours.

We now expect an additional 6~8+ Inches of Snow here Overnight in Beautiful {-:SUNNY:-} California :o)

If New Madrid lets loose with a Big one, it will have very little to no effect/affect to the Grand Gulf Missy Sippy nuke plant.That is according to what I heard on one of the Jackson tee vee noos stations a couple of weeks ago.Y'all dont's need to worry about nuke poisoning from backwater hick Missy Sippy.

That big old partially sunken Barge is still stuck to one of the piers on the old Missy Sippy River Bridge between Vicksburg and Louisiana.They gave up on trying to saw it in half with a big chain connected to two derricks on a Boat.Today they was dropping a big ass chisel thangy up and down on that Barge, trying to cut it up.Tomorrow they will try something else.They might have to get a big Tugboat and try to yank that Barge away from that Bridge pier.

Hmm - do you have QRM at your cabin? My guess is that, the more rural (and QRM-free) the setting, the less useful a set of phased antennae would be. They don't work on atmospheric/QRN noise very well. MFJ and Timewave says they work on things like lightning crashes, but you'd be very hard-pressed to twiddle those knobs fast enough to use it for that purpose.

Having said that, two DX-Ultras phased together for noise abatement might be just dandy, and they don't require grounding for exemplary results.

There's some QRM, depending on whether the server is running at the Lodge. And there are some noise sources that intermittently radiate from the power lines that run across the property. When it's not, it's dead quiet. But that burst of noise comes at the worst times, you know?

I've got the real estate for two DX-Ultra's. That may be an option, too.

The power company is rerouting the overhead lines in the area, because of access and extreme weather issues, so there may be relief on the way. In the meantime, I need to work on antenna options.

Well, I hope he lands on his feet if he wishes to continue in broadcasting.
He has contributed a whale of a lot of information about radio over the past 2 decades I've been on Usenet and Fidonet before that.

And he has also graciously made available on his website all kinds of radio/TV trade magazines and Broadcasting Yearbooks.

Immigration status and determining US citizenship is a strictly federal function. The country as a whole offers candidates for national office; the states have no say in who they are.

It depends. If all the QRM is coming from one t-storm cell, or a line 500 miles away, you don't have to adjust that much. I've always lived in a neighborhood and have had excellent DX catches in spite of the power lines and dimmers. The reason I use verticals is that they have reduced response to things below about 15 degrees elevation.

The MFJ-1056 is handy for steering a null toward a single noise source and doesn't require a full size "noise' antenna. That's why the "noise" antenna has a preamp. My "noise" antenna is actually farther from Dewey's RV than my "main" antenna, but it still does its job.

Inflatable Bladders have been used before to raise sunken Ships.Ship Salvage (whatver they call it) is a Technology that dates way back many years ago.There is a movie about a commercial Jet Airplane that went down below the water and they used inflatable bladders to float the Airplane up to the surface, that was only a movie though.

The Barge is only partially submerged, at least it was as far as yesterday when I was watching TV news about it.The Barge is stuck/wedged against one of the Bridge piers.Somebody on TV news yesterday said the River is 200 feet deep in that area.I never knew it is that deep.Bert Case, WLBT 3 TV news is, or was in Vicksburg the last few days, he said they might have to wait untill the River goes down and try something else.U.S.Coast Guard is over there, working on the problem.

Big Ass Barge Boat Chisels R US.
Bit, we are not Chiseling anybody like those damn politicians are.

That lawn mower my old buddy gave me last Monday, it is really to heavy/dangerous for me to use along that slope on doggy's front yard by the street.Metinks its going to rain, I reckon I better use that lawn mower this morning to mow the other part of doggy's yard.
Yesterday, I plugged in my phone, I told him the next time he comes over here to come over here in his pickup truck.I am giving that lawn mower back to him, that gas engine weed trimmer too.I don't do weed eating.Although when I buy me a new 20'' $125.00 lawn mower at the Dangerous Walmart store (probally this afternoon) I think it is a Weedeater brand name lawn mower.

True, Dave, but the closer the noise antenna is in general electrical characteristic to the main antenna, I believe, the better phasing ability you'll get. For awhile I used the tiny noise whip that came on the 1026, and it actually worked better than one might expect, especially on 60 meters - but the few antennas I have had since than have progressively improved on that, and less preamping I need to use on the noise antenna, the better the results seem to be.

The vertical idea is very intriguing. I have heard, maybe erroneously, that verts capture more QRM due to its inherent polarity;
but I can imagine that two verts pumped through a 1026 might be a really great set-up if the sources of QRM are limited.

Considering the volume of mis and dis information contained in his posts, and his often blind allegiance to advertising agency influence, the benefits are not as clear as we'd like them to be.

So those accusations that he committed crimes boil down to "Illegal

Nice distortion, but that's not what I said.

Go. Look. Read. The discussion went on for more nearly a year, and involved many on RRS.

More likely, he was doing in his off hours while on the road. There was a definite pattern to the hours of his posting activities.

When he defended his endorsement of illegals, and his institutional evasion of is responsibility as a citizen in the context of his employments, he did disappear for more than a year, so it's not unlikely that there were repercussions within Univision. But who can say.

I have been reading his posts since the 80s and I don't recall seeing him write anything about any of those topics. The only things I've seen him write about were broadcast-related.

He has written about them in other newsgroups and forums.

However, he is entitled to his own opinions.

IF Your main RFI/EMF Noise Sources are External to your House an 'Outside' Vertical Noise {Sense} Antenna usually works better than the Built-in Whip Antenna.
-however- IF Your Your main RFI/EMF Noise Sources are Internal to your House the Built-in Whip usually works well as the Vertical Noise {Sense} Antenna.

Basic 'Outside' Vertical Noise {Sense} Antenna : Connecting a "Snake" {50 foot Coax Cable} Antenna that ends in a Vertical Section with a Bottom 5-12 Feet of Coax Shield and a Top 5-12 Feet of Inner Conductor to the MFJ-1026's Rear SO239 AUX ANT Jack.
http://www.universal-radio.com/CATALOG/preamps/3542rear.html
[Total 10~25 Foot Vertical Noise {Sense} Antenna] Place a Clamp-On Ferrite Bead at the Base* of the Vertical Section. * Very Near Ground Level

Relative to your Main SWL Antenna your Vertical Noise {Sense} Antenna can be moved around to find the best
Right-Side [Out=L/2] Center; Left-Side [Out=L/2] Center
Far-End [Out=L/2]; Near-End [Out=L/2]
-if- You have an Identifiable 'Outside' Noise Source having the Noise {Sense} Antenna Closer to the Noise than the Main SWL Antenna can make it more effective and produce better overall results.

-note- Out=L/2 : Try to get the Vertical Noise {Sense} Antenna "Out" and Away from the Main SWL Antenna by about Half-the-Length "L/2" of the Main SWL Antenna or at least Half-Way between the Noise Source and the Main SWL Antenna; that is within the confines of your property. -better- "Out" and Away is "L=1"

That Dangerous Walmart store at the intersection of Greenway Drive and Highway 18 (a mile and a half South of doggy's couch) only had one 20'' $125.00 lawn mower, that was the one on display, on that display rack/shelf thingy.I asked the Dangerous Walmart Associate woman to call the Dangerous Walmart store in Clinton,Missy Sippy to see if they have any 20'' lawn mowers in stock.She said they had two of them in stock this morning (yesterday afternoon when I was at the Greenway Drive - Highway 18 store) but they already sold them.There are at least five more Dangerous Walmart stores in the Jackson metro area/suburbs.Sheet, I wasen't about to go driving all over town for a 20'' MOFO lawn mower.So, I bought a Weedeater 22'' $145.00 lawn mower.Stores around here have more lawn mowers than you can shake a stick at.The Sears store (275 of my footsteps South of doggy's couch) at Metrocenter Mall has them too.Some of those Sears lawn mowers have proprietary Sears parts on them.I don't want a Sears lawn mower.

OK, so here are the propagation specs for the last 8 hours or so...from eHam...

1500 by VE7CC SFI=109, A=8, K=2, No Storms -> No Storms
1200 by VE1DX SFI=109, A=8, K=1, No Storms -> No Storms
0900 by AE5E SFI=109, A=8, K=3, No Storms -> No Storms ordinary...but they do not tell the whole story. By about 0900z, the 11-meter band was erupting with signals here near SF Bay, and after 1000z it was almost ridiculous. Voice of Mongolia, always a tough station to get any audio on hereabouts, was at S-9+ on AM, and would have been armchair if not for R. Australia 5 kHz down that was blasting in at S-9 + 40. At about 1045z, several mainland China and Russia outlets were bombing in here at S-9 + 60 db. Insane. I'm glad I got to see it :-)

ZCZC AP14

Propagation Forecast Bulletin 14 ARLP014
From Tad Cook, K7RA
Seattle, WA April 8, 2011
To all radio amateurs

SB PROP ARL ARLP014
ARLP014 Propagation de K7RA

Our Sun is still quite active, but sunspot numbers are down this week when compared with the week before. Average daily sunspot numbers were down nearly 34 points to 68.3, and average daily solar flux declined nearly 3 points to 111.8. Geomagnetic activity was quite strong this week, with planetary A index on April 2 at 20, and 26 on April 6.

The latest forecast from USAF and NOAA is for lower activity than the forecast from Wednesday, reported in the ARRL Letter. The latest from Thursday, April 7 has solar flux of 110, 100, 95 and 100 for April 8-11, 105 on April 12-15, then 90, 100, and 115 on April 16-18, and 125 on April 19-27. Predicted planetary A index is 5, 5, 10 and 10 on April 8-11, and 5 on April 12-17, and 7 on April 18-20.

Geophysical Institute Prague predicts quiet conditions on April 8, quiet to unsettled April 9, unsettled to active April 10, active April 11, unsettled April 12, quiet to unsettled April 13, and back to quiet on April 14.

On April 4 NASA released a new solar cycle prediction, and they say Cycle 24 may be the smallest sunspot cycle in 200 years. Read about this prediction at http://solarscience.msfc.nasa.gov/predict.shtml.

NOAA/SWPC Boulder has their own updated prediction, which you can see on page 14 of the April 5 Preliminary Report and Forecast at http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/weekly/pdf/prf1857.pdf. This has hardly changed from last month's version, at http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/weekly/pdf/prf1853.pdf, but notice that the predicted smoothed sunspot values for April, May and August 2011 are each slightly higher on the new one, by one point each. Since these smoothed values are averaged over a year, perhaps this slight increase is because of higher recent solar activity.

As he often does, David Moore sent in a couple of interesting and informative links. Click on http://snurl.com/27r8mt for a video from the Smithsonian on the Solar Dynamics Observatory and the STEREO mission.

The second at http://snurl.com/27r8n6 is an article from the Smithsonian about scientific efforts to understand our Sun.

Glenn Wyant, VA3DX of St. Catherines, Ontario sent in a report on DX recently worked. He writes, "On March 25 my good friend Garry VE3XN called me on the phone at about 1125z. He claimed he had just finished his 5 Band WAZ with a XU7ACY (Cambodia) QSO on 80 meters CW! Although it was too late for me that day, I was there the next day and put Peter XU7ACY in my log for a new one on 80.

"What was really neat was to work Peter again on March 28 at 1133z for a new one on 12 meters! I also worked E21EJC (Thailand) on 12 meters at 1620z for another new one on 12. The following day (March 29) I again worked Kob E21EJC on 10 meters at 1440z, as well as VU4PB on 12 CW at 0103z, and had to beam at 190 degrees to copy him. I figured I was done with new band countries for awhile now, but March 30 proved me wrong.

"At 1437z I worked VU4PB on 10 meter CW and then again at 1558z on 10 meter SSB. Both QSOs were on the traditional path at 10 degrees.

"What was strange was that VU4PB was 5x7 here at one point on SSB, yet my friend Garry VE3XN, only 142 miles west of me and using the same antenna as I and at the same height could not copy them at all! Sort of like 6 meter spotlight propagation."

Angel Santana, WP3GW of Trujillo Alto, Puerto Rico says, "Last week I had an 'Arabian Night' because between 31 March/1 April UTC over a 50 minute period got to work A92GR, A41OW and 9K2OD on 20 meters, plus heard 9Y4D work a VU3, which sounded very strong! And 1/2 an hour later contacted the largest Island of the world: Greenland - OX3KQ on 18.126 MHz. And incredibly got to work YB0NFL on 10 meters at 1530 UTC (11:30 am local) Saturday 2nd!"

Dan Eskenazi, K7SS of Seattle notes that just before the recent improved propagation conditions, his antenna blew down in a windstorm. Now some of his more superstitious ham friends are begging him not to put it back up.

My new lawn mower is like my old lawn mower, very simple and basic.I like the simple things.Before I mow doggy's yard again next week, I am going to remove that automatic engine shut off S.IT from my new lawn mower.F.CK that Commie ass fed govt mandated ''safety'' S.IT!

I have an Idea about building myself a lawn mower.If I ever get around to riggin it up and if it works, I could mow doggy's front and rear yard in about fiteen minutes.

Not me. You could have said "I wish I knew how to speak Italian", or "Your English is infinitely better than my Italian".

Why should the rest of the world communicate for YOUR sake? Or mine, for that matter. francesco makes a sincere effort to share his radio hobby with anyone caring to visit his site. Why be so small as to belittle his English?

Have you ever tried learning Italian? Telling someone whose second or third language is English that it's not good makes you sound arrogant and self centred. It would make you sound arrogant even if YOUR English was above average, which it isn't. On the best days it rates between a Cuhulin and an RHF. Sub par.

Mike, I have lived all over the world, I am living on the other side of the world now and when I leave here I may choose to live Europe.

One of my good friends and family are Italian and live in Turin. My last chopper pilot was Italian also and I spent time with his family.

I speak 10 different languages, 5 Arabic.

Now do me a favor? Please don't answer any more of my post on this or any other group. The BS about someone using you name is just that, BS.

TIA.

Oh ! That is something I was told in the past . . . You are not the first one to mention it . Anyhow , I was NOT born in Africa . Neither were any of my immediate ancestors (as far as I can go back in my Roots) . Mary and Louis Leakys tried to prove something that may be partially true, though . However , going THAT far in pre-history of mankind is risky ,to say the least . Just like in Darwin's "Theory of Evolution" comparing modern Homo Sapiens to wild animals (any species) is bordering on pure scientific hypothesis (or profanity ,as some people may think) . Anatomically modern Humans did not appear on the horizon until about 250K BC . And where they came FROM -- now THAT is the Question . . .

12085 kHz. I used USB to avoid R. Australia's 12080 splatter, which was considerable...although eventually VoM became so strong that S-AM + Passband with the RF Gain turned down a tad sounded pretty nice :-).

BTW, VoM is on the air at 0900 - 1100Z. Last segment in English, but they turn their beam for that one and the signal drops just a tad as a result.

- Oh ! That is something I was told in the past . . . You are not the - first one to mention it . Anyhow , I was NOT born in Africa .
Neither

- were any of my immediate ancestors (as far as I can go back in my
- Roots) . Mary and Louis Leakys tried to prove something that may be
- partially true, though . However , going THAT far in pre-history of
- mankind is risky ,to say the least . Just like in Darwin's "Theory of
- Evolution" comparing modern Homo Sapiens to wild animals (any species)
- is bordering on pure scientific hypothesis (or profanity ,as some
- people may think) . Anatomically modern Humans did not appear on the - horizon until about 250K BC . And where they came FROM -- now THAT is Blasphemer !

The Sacred Darwin's Holy Words of Evolution

Heretic !
The Sacred Concept of Evolution by the Holy Darwin

IMHO, the E1 has better features, but due to my failing vision, the SAT800's large display (or at least much larger digital display data) makes it visually ergonomical, though it's hard to call anything as bloated as the Sat800 "ergonomical."

They make chrome plated toenail cutters that work better than old wire cutters. Same form factor, except cutting surfaces have a slight arc.

Water is too precious to waste on grass, at least around here. Whatever

You wouldn't have real grass in Jackson! You'd only have that horrible looking stuff that passes for grass 'cause you're in a hot area. Need to be in the middle of the temperate zone to get real soft underfoot grass. Got the same problem here in Melbourne. Every summer (except this one just gone) the grass dries right out and looks dead. Every winter it needs mowing every week. Might get some of that plastic stuff! Never needs mowing and just hose off the dust once in a while!

I have a Perseus which is very similar in specs. The best thing about these radios are the filters which are truly brick wall. The bad thing is that you have to boot up the computer and update it. But, once you have the computer running there are many benefits. Like constant readout of the station on freq., running decoding programs like MMSSTV in the background, recording a big chunk of spectrum on the HD for later playback, and excellent noise reduction.

I use a dedicated laptop to run the SDR and have had no problems running multiple programs using Virtual Audio Cable to connect them together. In fact, I got a perfect SSTV picture from Wolverine Radio last night with MMSSTV set to Auto and running in the background along with the SDR.

BTW> Channel Z Radio is on 6925kHz AM right now <2148 UTC>

They aren't real filters at all on the Winradio. The Perseus has front end bandpass filters. A DSP bandpass filter does nothing for close-in intermod; not like a crystal lattice roofing filter.

The Value of Volunteers

An AIRChive of international broadcasts cannot exist without the service of volunteers. Any person who believes that recording and sharing information with others will benefit should volunteer his or her services.

If recordings are not done and submitted on a regular basis the AIRChive will have gaps that make it considerably less valuable. For this reason, the AIRC asks that volunteers take their service to the organization seriously. Any person who volunteers to record or serve the AIRC is expected to do so on a regular basis. Failure to maintain expectations may result in expulsion from the AIRC.

Requirements to SUBMIT RECORDED PROGRAMS

All you need to become a Content Member is:

A shortwave radio

A way to record from the radio and convert it to an MP3 file

Internet access to send the file to the AIRC

Maintain a regular schedule to record broadcasts

A clock set to UTC and placed by your radio is recommended but not required

That is all. There are no age requirements. There is no fee to join the AIRC. There are no dues to maintain. There is little cost to record and submit the programs.

All the AIRC asks is that members understand their responsibilities and take them seriously.

I think WinRadio still has an improved version on the drawing board:

http://www.winradio.com/home/g33ddc.htm

added features:
4 MHz instantaneous processing bandwidth
Low-noise preamplifier
Configurable preselection filters

Another great DXpedition to our Atlantic Ocean Seefontein site. Great logs and great cameradie.
Some nice tropical band catches as well. see:
http://www.dxing.info/dxpeditions/seefontein_2011_03.

I was bitterly disappointed with my Perseus SDR - feel like throwing it in the trash can.

MWB,

The Feature of the Eton E1 over the Grundig Sat 800-M that I really like the Most is the Tuning Knob with it's Fast and Slow Tuning Functions.

Plus the Grundig Sat 800-M Radio can eat-up a Set of 6 "D" Cell Batteries [9 VDC] in one or two Days/Nights of Radio Listening.
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/portable/0800.html

-versus- The Eton E1 Radio will run on a Set of 4 "D"
Batteries [6 VDC] for several Days {Nights} of Radio Listening. {Week+}
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/portable/0101.html

-but- Both use an External DC Input 9 VDC 1 Amp power source.

yes 'i' love to 'spin' the radio's tuning knob ~ RHF

Well, Radio Australia just reworked their shortwave schedule.

Goodbye to "Late Night Live", "Big Ideas", "National Interest", "Philosopher's Zone" and a bunch more of those Radio National programs that made it worth listening to. And a much reduced number of repeats, giving only one chance at receiving "The Science Show" and "Background Briefing" , for example.

Is it just a substantial loss of sensitivity /gain? Is the audio distorted/garbled ? There is a new 'de-bugged' software V3.0 beta1 .

No, it is just less sensative and more noisy than the superb Icom. It doesn't seem to be malfunctioning, just not up to the Icom IC-7600 standard.
After I had trouble on the second DXpedition I upgraded to software ver 3.0beta1 and that improved matters but it is still not up to the Icom or my pal Vince's Drake R8A.

For instance he heard a clear ID on a US station at 0500z on 1480 kHz but all that was on Perseus was an unreadable het.

No. People -- especially the best people -- are motivated by things far above economics on the scale of values.

Could the 'rich' possibly be public sector union folks? After all, they make more than their private sector equivalents.

And, just who are these 'poor' and why are they always poor? Aren't the 'poor' always with us, and, are there not 'poor' folks who move up to being 'rich', and, some 'rich' folks who move down to being 'poor'?

In some cases, it may just be a matter of having the clown 'tard fools who insist upon wearing their pants down to their knees simply staying in school and actually trying to learn something.

The Uber-Rich Institute for Pedantic Responses has sent me forth with this missive:

dessert = an after meal treat desert = an arid region, to abandon, etc deserts = an inflection of the base verb desert, or merely two or more deserts.

The way we Uber-Rich remember which is which is quite simple, especially with our diets.

"Two servings of deSSert" (two Servings = two esses = food)

This is all well and fine, unless of course you MEANT 'just desserts', as in "I've poisoned the Master's dessert, dearest. The pompous bastard will be dead by morning. Missus RHF will surely reward us."

That's highly debatable. Furthermore, what one man classes as "wealth" another may class as a curse.

Much labor is destructive; and much leisure is highly creative.

There's so much more to life than "who gets the money." That is a lesson that right and left both need to learn -- right before they toss the left/right paradigm where it belongs.

I still maintain that wealth (and by this I mean spendable capital, not some touchy-feely inherent wealth thing) is not created at all, but borrowed - or stolen - from someone else. You can't GET something without someone else LOSING something. The idea of creating wealth is a MYTH that Billionaires use to keep the little guy down. You cannot name a concentration of wealth of any size, the accumulation of which did not involve the extraction of wealth from some other source, be it human or natural.

I still maintain that wealth (and by this I mean spendable capital, not some touchy-feely inherent wealth thing) is not created at all, but borrowed - or stolen - from someone else. You can't GET something without someone else LOSING something. The idea of creating wealth is a MYTH that Billionaires use to keep the little guy down. You cannot name a concentration of wealth of any size, the accumulation of which did not involve the extraction of wealth from some other source, be it human or natural.

Exactly. My pet peeve...

No one on this planet really "owns" anything. It's all smoke and mirrors.

Many say that ownership of land is by "right of conquest." In any other words, this is simply theft (or, in the original case, misappropriation).
Conquest grants no inherent rights, only removes the rights of others.

The only thing anyone 'owns' is their time on Earth. We try to exchange that with others for parts of their time in the form of labor. It's all supposed to come out even. "Wealth" is only created because one person gives more of their time than another (or, again, by misappropriation; i.e. the Earth's resources belong to no one person in reality. Just because someone finds something and says "it's mine" does not make it so (if someone finds your wallet and says "it's mine now", does that make it so?)

Stepping down off my soapbox now..

That is a deeper insight than most have advanced here.

That is why it outrages me when those who claim to speak for "society" or "the majority" demand that my time and my loved ones' time be spent to work for _them_ or _their_ pet causes -- with the threat of violence and imprisonment if we do not comply.

That is why it outrages me that bankers are permitted to create money out of nothing every time they make a "loan," thus forcing me to spend my time working for them because every dollar is diluted by their legalized counterfeiting.

There is a better way. It is called Social Credit.

With all good wishes,

Kevin.

You've hit on a real truth here -- but it's _not_ a zero-sum game as you seem to be saying. See below.

"Spendable capital," i.e., money, _is_ created. And, contrary to what the neocons say, only a small percentage is created by the government. The vast majority is created by private banks. And private banks are the _only_ entity allowed to create money out of nothing. Which is exactly what they do every time they make a "loan."

Thus, we must all work for them, since their money-creation charade results in huge interest payments to them for doing essentially nothing, and every dollar they create out of thin air dilutes every widow's and pensioner's and investor's dollar. Keeping us in debt and working for them forever -- as taxpayers, as homeowners, as investors, as businessmen -- is their goal. That is theft, as you say.

That is how the system really works, and the money-men fund phony political parties and media empires that hide that fact and -- barely suppressing a smirk -- hold out mirages like Faux-News-style
"free enterprise" and Marxian or FDR-type "socialism" which don't even address the fundamental problem as dead-end diversions for their slaves.

That part of your post isn't true.

People create real benefits, real beauty, real time-savers, real discoveries, and real values that others recognize and gladly pay for -- and which constitute real new wealth -- all the time. It's not a zero-sum game. Someday someone may discover a way to send Nature's silver seed to take root on another world beyond the known, so Life as we know it may transcend the fate of this increasingly crowded and filthy sphere. What wealth -- wealth that never existed before -- _that_ would constitute!

Kevin, you and I will have to disagree on this. It is a zero-sum game
- it only depends on how you define the outcome. Benefits, beauty, discoveries - all took blood, sweat and tears, all took resources, and all cost somebody something in order for them to be of value.
Somebody else must still give up something to their "creators" to get the further benefit. Otherwise, they are just the "touchy-feely" thing I alluded to earlier.

Not that I have anything against considering the value of beauty and knowledge - I place a very high value on it - but to acquire it, I must give up something of value in return, and if I create or extract it, I must charge somebody something to derive material benefit from it. Beethoven's music did him no good unless he could sell it, and that would have been a transfer of wealth, in which somebody else gave up actual capital he had earned or stolen elsewhere.

Life is not a zero sum game. My success, for instance, does not come at someone else's expense.

That is, then, not stealing, or loss, but voluntary exchange. You exchange what you value less for what you value more.

That, by definition, is not zero-sum.

Of course everything has a price, in time or gold or annoyance or in alternatives passed up. That's an inevitable truth of Life and can never be escaped.

But the supply of good and desirable things _has_ increased since humans arose on the earth, and they are available with a smaller outlay of time and energy than before, so I don't think it can be realistically viewed as a zero sum game. Free players only pay a cost when, in their view, the benefit is worth more than the cost.

The division of labor, for example, is an intellectual invention that didn't cost anywhere near as much as it produced in benefits... and it benefited practically everybody. So its invention created true wealth, in that the 1) the benefits far exceeded the cost from any participant's point of view and 2) the benefits never existed before, and some of them weren't even conceivable before. Many inventions fit into that paradigm. Even software-defined radios!

I'd put Beethoven and Vivaldi and Chopin (and even the Firesign Theatre, to bring in a group that's not musical) in that category too. The old vinyl records I got at discount or second-hand cost me only a few minutes of my time. The mind-expansion and joy received was worth far more than the cost, and I think it very likely that those who exerted themselves the most -- the artists -- would agree with that evaluation too. In fact, I believe that many of them would produce this magnificent wealth even if they were not paid money for it.

The market is supposed, in theory, to adjust prices so that the average "touchy-feely" valuations of material creations or services are reflected in their prices -- so that the creation of real value, as seen and felt by humans, is reflected in its valuation in "spendable capital."

I believe that the market could come close to doing that, if a dollar was as inviolate a measure of value as a foot is an inviolate measure of length. But neither the money-men, nor the media they own, nor the politicians they own, will ever allow that to happen.

Happy Tuesday,

Kevin.

Don't the public sector unions extract the wealth from the taxpayers?

That's one thing I always wonder about these radio shows that tout their gold selling business's (typically an infomercial). On the one hand they say that paper money is becoming worthless, yet they want to exchange gold for ones ever increasingly worthless paper money.

Give us your worthless currency and we'll send you your valuable gold straightaway.

No, not stealing - yes voluntary exchange - but exchange is like for like in value, and is not creation. Then, even if it was not an equivalency, it would still not be creation of wealth. The sum total of the value of both parties would remain the same; wealth, like energy, is conserved.

That's why the value of gold is now so "high" - lots of frightened people have shoveled boatloads of decreasingly valuable money at it.
The gold isn't worth any more in REAL dollars than it was before...but people have driven up the demand while the dollar has dropped, so the suppliers can charge more for it.

BTW, when you buy this stuff, do they send you a slab of gold, or a "certificate"? If I were so inclined, that detail would make a LOT of difference to me.

There are certainly various methods, but if one is so inclined, I recommend taking physical possession of said commodity, and do it in coin form rather than 'slab' or ingot form.

And, hide it somewhere, do not put it in a 'safe deposit box' as if and when the time comes, it may not be readily available from your local 'friendly bank' as said bank may be under federal orders to release nothing from 'safe deposit box's' prior to federal inspection and confiscation of the commodity in question.

One other thing. Yes, the demand has risen, and the dollar has dropped, but the dollar has decreased in value due recently to the actions of the Obama regime.

The same has happened to oil, and yes, demand is up around the world, not necessarily in the USA, but oil is typically quoted in dollars (much like gold), as it is still the currency of choice, and, as the value of the dollar drops, it takes more of those dollars to buy one barrel of oil (or one ounce of gold).

One must be filthy rich to start investing in precious metals right now . Paper money is strong (or accepted everywhere)as long as the the guv'mint printing it is stable and militarily superior . Like the US currency . Why it's value is fluctuating so much against other major currencies must be a result of 'conspiracy' of the financial 'wizards' . And that's the bitter truth .

Gold is currently trading at $1455.80 an ounce. Is that filthy rich?

If so, I'm going back to bed shortly with a warm fuzzy feeling :) cause somewhere around here I can certainly come up with $1455.80.

Please, o learned one, tell us where the jobs of the future will be?
What is the point of studying if the only jobs left are jobs like changing bedpans and washing dishes?

Please note I said 'Uber rich".

WTF is "nobility"?

While you may champion these high-minded ideals, your culture has chosen the lowest common denominator to define worth. You can give these intangibles to hungry people but that will not satisfy them.

Highly debatable? It's pretty much the basis of all property rights in traditional Western Civilization.

An Altoids tin full of coaxial attenuators (aka "Pads") comes in real handy when using cheap radios with big antennas.

liberty for the good of the group.

You think that because you have been shielded from the externalities of your success. As you drive your auto think about the giant lakes of toxic waste in Nigeria and the dead babies in Iraq.

As you enjoy your handheld electronic miracle think about Chinese prisoners working 12 hour shifts 6 and a half days a week building your toys.

Sure they do.

Just like the taxpayers extract wealth from the unions, by having their kids taught, their snow plowed and the fire department coming when their house is on fire.

What's your grudge against the unions? They shouldn't be able to bargain?

Just do what their bosses dictate?

"You now have a class size of 80".

"You are going to work a double shift behind the wheel of that snow plow -- with no overtime".

"Oh, and did we tell you, your new salary is five bucks an hour".

Public or private unions, without bargaining, you are 100% at the mercy of however much "they" want to chisel you for.

To anticipate any flak, that's why they call it 'bargaining'. Just because the union asks for it does not mean management has to give it. Hopefully, they will meet somewhere in the middle.

Finally, I realize that some unions have abused bargaining (only because management let them?), but if you go back to the 1930s when the unions came into being, management was abusing the hell out of labor. The pendulum swings.

One other thing. Yes, the demand has risen, and the dollar has dropped, but the dollar has decreased in value due recently to the actions of the Obama regime.

The same has happened to oil, and yes, demand is up around the world, not necessarily in the USA, but oil is typically quoted in dollars (much like gold), as it is still the currency of choice, and, as the value of the dollar drops, it takes more of those dollars to buy one barrel of oil (or one ounce of gold).

Nothing to do with Obama or the government, really. It's a financial vicious cycle.

The more people buy precious metals, the less of them there are, so supply and demand says the price goes up (and so the dollar/whatever currency goes down). This spiral will continue as long as people are buying precious metals.... and it certainly doesn't help that doomsayers are pushing the public to buy gold (and to a lesser extent, silver and platinum).

Eventually, currency will be worthless, or very close to it. What's funny is, precious metals will likely not be worth squat to the average person (it's kind of silly if you think about it... what's gold really good for?).
The logical end is that barter will become king again, with people trading their goods or direct labor for others goods or labor.

It's called medicinal marijuana for a reason. I have brain abnormalities from birth. I have 2 kinds of arthritis and my spine is damaged. I would be taking a whole lot more "pharmaceuticals" if I wasn't doing an occasional toke on my little $5 hash pipe.

My personal culture is unfathomable to a closed minded bigot, such as yourself.

I have no idea who this Francis of Assissi is, as I am non-catholic

The only Buddhist monk I know is the Dalai Llama, and he is as far from "nobility" as one can get.

"Nobility is a state-privileged status which is generally hereditary. The privileges associated with nobility may constitute substantial advantages over or relative to non-nobles"-wikipedia

Nobility is quiet virtue. It is being kind to those less fortunate or less able than you, while at the same time seeing that the highest achievement of the highest among us is the ultimate value.
It is the refusal to accept slavery -- refusing to be enslaved, refusing to enslave others, and refusing to acquiesce in others being enslaved. It is being true to one's self and one's nature. It is protecting, honoring, and supporting one's people.

Titles of nobility ought to be granted only to those who have evinced these qualities. At one time, those who inherited such titles due to a family connection were expected to live up to them or be dishonored forever. In Britain, the entire system became corrupted by money, however, as you can see here:

http://nationalvanguard.org/2010/11/anti-nobility/

But just because titles of nobility have become ignoble laughingstocks does not mean that real nobility does not exist.

> While you may champion these high-minded ideals, your culture has > chosen the lowest common denominator to define worth. You can give > these intangibles to hungry people but that will not satisfy them.

The fact that the average, or, as you say, the lowest common denominator, defines worth in the marketplace is all the more reason to _raise_ the average level of intelligence, character, and nobility in our civilization. There's only one way to do that.

And I can guarantee that importing, and mixing with, dozens of millions of the lowest cheap-labor types from the most primitive societies on Earth isn't it.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Yes, there may indeed be cycles, but, when a government borrows tremendous amounts of money, the value of the currency by nature becomes worth less.

So yes, it has a great deal to do with the Obama regime, and government in general.

Permanent interdiction

Dr Ramana warned that it would likely take several months without any more setbacks before the crisis can be declared stable.

"What we're seeing is a lot of the systems were taken out during the tsunami and explosions," he added, "The lack of power to circulate the water is a problem, so there areni¿½t going to be any quick fixes for these things."

Olson also fears that if the core meltdowns get to the groundwater under the plant, "You have an explosive force that is like putting dynamite under the site. The problem is if you get this molten fuel into that water it could cause a steam explosion."

"Since unit two is showing signs of fission happening, the chances of something more catastrophic happening at that site are increasing," Olson added, "People are acting like the worst is over, and that is just not understanding the real issues here as far as the radiological impacts."

She also pointed out that the fuel pool in reactor No. 3 "is gone, according to recent photos. There is no fuel there. The reactor fuel pool in No. 3 is gone. Where did it go?"

I was referring to currency when I used "lowest common denominator", meaning society is lazy and stupid.

It doesn't matter what rate you tax at, the loop holes assure they don't pay it anyway.

ZERO taxes paid:

I read somewhere a few year back that if business paid 10 percent in taxes, with NO deductions, the amount collected would be 300 percent higher than the average being paid now.

Other than closet(?) racism or petty partisanship, I'm not sure why you single out Obama. We've had inflation for the last 70 or 80 years, no matter which party was in power.

Well, yes and no. Barter can be a real bother. For example, I'm sure we've all seen the ad that says "Will trade 'X' for 'Y' ". Maybe we really want 'X' but don't have the 'Y' that the other person wants.

Currency is sort of the "universal solvent" or "lowest common denominator" that keeps the wheels of trade turning.

Definitely not like for like value. You have to be exchanging what you have for what you want more. The item being purchased/treaded for has more value to you than the value you reliquish for it.

But the creation comes in the act of labor. If I create something out of raw materials, I have created the value for which you will will purchase it. That's creation of value. If I produce the raw materials, myself, that's also creation of value. Both instances I've created that value through my labor. And no one is harmed, or had his/her labor lost or stolen in the process. And I have created wealth that did not exist before. And you have purchased that wealth through resources you have acquired, or created.

Does this make sense?

God The Father says,
"God smiles at this very important question and

REVELATION DELIVERED THROUGH FRANCES M. KLUG
ON JUNE 20,1995 AT 9:55 A.M.

GOD THE FATHER

"A child asks God, 'What does my Soul look like? In case I see It, I will know what It is and that It is mine.'

God smiles at this very important question and says: Your Soul is a Portion of Me that reflects you in a Light to Me. I know all about you through your Soul that is a Portion of Me because, you see, as I Am the Creator Of All Things, I Am All Things, and as your Soul reflects you, It is a constant Connecting Link to Me.

This Gift of Mine to all human beings is My Gift of Love to a Special Creation of Mine. Man is capable of creation, which I have Lovingly shared with man, because I have created man to My Image and Likeness.

These Words of Mine, not completely understood by man, but when you wonder about your abilities, your talents, your reasoning, your logic in what you do, how you care for things, remember, I instilled these traits in you, for the courage needed, the intellect needed, the will you have to make judgments, decisions, on what is right and what is wrong.

My Love is also a Part of your way of life. There is so much I have blessed mankind with, and it is a great sadness to Me when moral weakness breaks the Trust, the Love, and the Closeness I have with you."

Try this definition, which is the one actually being referred to:

Nobility (n) 1: the quality or state of being noble in character, quality,

Noble (adj.) 1a : possessing outstanding qualities

Noble (adj.) 5: possessing, characterized by, or arising from superiority

It made sense to Adam Smith. From "Wealth of Nations":
"Labor, it must always be remembered, and not any particular commodity or set of commodities, is the real measure of the value both of silver and of all other commodities."

Some labor is rewarded more than others, sometimes for strange reasons:
"The exorbitant rewards of players, opera-singers, opera-dancers, &c are founded upon...the rarity and beauty of the talents, and the discredit of employing them."

Roy - did you make this up?

Frankly, not at all. A million gallons of the water in question - even a billion gallons - spread among the all the oceans, will result in concentrations of toxins and levels of radiation almost unmeasurable, assuming perfect mixing (which is a fair assumption worldwide, but a less than satisfactory assumption for the water immediately near Japan in the short term). The oceans of the world contain about 326,000,000,000,000,000,000 gallons of water, and the addition of even a billion contaminated gallons would be diluted by a factor of 326,000,000,000 times. That's less than 1/3 part per 100 billion on average, a VERY tiny concentration. This would be hard to detect under the best of circumstances, and I'd bet good money that increases in cancer rates as a result would be statistically insignificant, much less than having a well-used highway near your home, for example.

Contaminated rainwater, which could only come from cloud droplets forming on radioactive dust particles and by no other method, falling on the ocean would be nearly inconsequential after a couple of seconds. Pretty minor on land too.

Make no mistake - I am not a fan of U and PU fission reactors - but this fear is just not scientifically based at all. You should really stop being such a fearmonger.

The more critical problem is when this material is taken up by the local biota near Japan that feeds ever higher creatures on the food chain. Higher creatures tend to concentrate toxins, which not only hurts them but any critters that eat them. The fish nearby may be unsafe to eat for animals or humans for quite awhile, and the local marine mammal population will probably suffer even more than it already does (I refer, of course, to the brutal mass slaughter of dolphins in Japan).

The problem Dave relates, that of further meltdown and steam explosion, is demonstrably more immediate and dangerous locally. Earthwide, however, not a big deal, for the same reason - dilution. If it goes on for a LONG time, like years, I suppose it could have effects on populations of nearby Pacific Islands, assuming favorable wind patterns...but I'd have to see some better analysis to be convinced.

That, from a die-hard environmentalist.

The language is slightly imprecise here, at least to a layperson.
Does this mean the H2O pool is gone, or the fuel contained within it, or both?

No matter, still pretty scary stuff.

When a guv'mint spends more than it collects in taxes it is known as a bankrupted guv'mint . Like Greece , Ireland , Iceland , Portugal and more to come . By debasing or devaluing the currency the authority undermines it's prestige and respect from it's own people (Equador , Argentina , Mexico etc) . Some EU members refused to introduce the euro altogether . Some are still regretting it .

Are you aware that the US Dollar is the official currency of Ecuador and has been since 2000?

There are also other countries that have adopted the US Dollar as their official currency.

Wonder how happy they are?

Pawlenty says 'I'm running' in presidential bid gaffe

(AFP) ï¿½ 5 hours ago

WASHINGTON ï¿½ Former Minnesota governor Tim Pawlenty, a Republican, said point-blank he was running for president, only to deny in the next breath it was official.

"I'm running for president," Pawlenty told CNN in responding to a question about whether he would accept an offer to be the Republican vice presidential nominee.

"I'm not putting my hat in the ring rhetorically or ultimately for vice president. I'm focused on running for president."

The language is slightly imprecise here, at least to a layperson.
Does this mean the H2O pool is gone, or the fuel contained within it,
or both?

No matter, still pretty scary stuff.

I think they are saying the fuel is gone. But the water had also drained into the local area water.

the One-Times [1X] Safe Levels of Radiation only requires that Japan Contaminates -doing-the-math-1,000,000 x 100,000 = 100,000,000,000 Gallons of World Wide {Global} Ocean Waters
? ? ? Which Part of 100 Billion Gallons of Radioactive Contaminated Waste Waters Is Un-Clear ! ! !

You can't dilute radioactive particles and make them less mutagenic; you are just dispersing them more.

When the secondary containment of F.D. reactor 3 exploded three days into the incident its spent fuel (waste) pond was pulverized and the contents were scattered for many kilometers around the plant. At that point the incident was in Chernobyl category 7 territory, but the authorities were afraid to panic rescue workers away from the region.

Isn't it like $500? That's pretty low end for a communications receiver (even with the $300 computer you need to make it work). A radio is only as good as the front end.

The criminal act was putting reactors so close together that a catastrophe in one of them makes the area too hot for workers to prevent catastrophes in the ones next to it.

http://www.theregister.co.uk/2011/04/13/bbc_plt/

Recent experiments carried out by the BBC demonstrate how power-line networking can interfere with FM radio and knock out DAB entirely, but only for those who get a decent data rate.

The new study was commissioned by the BBC and authored by one current and one former BBC engineer. The study examines transmissions coming off PLT kit, but while they were measuring the signal strengths and monitoring the frequencies, the engineers turned on a portable radio to discover if it still worked. They found that it did not. That is a critical issue as the only technical requirement for PLT kit states that it must not prevent other devices "operat[ing] as intended". PLT kit is required to conform to the Electromagnetic Compatibility Regulations 2006, which state that such interference can't be allowed.

Yes, maybe but that's NOT what you said. Your implication was that this would be a worldwide catastrophe, when in fact the math is pretty clear that except for the local area (like within a 100 kM radius), the effects will likely be small or unmeasurable.

Your math is fuzzier than a koala bear.

Take 100,000 and divide it by 330,000,000,000. What do you get? You get an increase in radiation over natural background levels of 1/330,000, or an INCREASE of 0.0003%. Tiny. Insignificant. Probably much less than you get from a walk in the mountains from radon gas.

> -oops- 70K Years of Global Radioactive Toxic Waste

Yes, I know. Just like the stuff every nuke has been generating since the 1950s. It's bad long-lasitng stuff. I know, I pay attention to science and technology all the time. But it is in Japan, not the entire globe. They have a serious cleanup problem there, if it is even possible - but it is not a global disaster. The math just does not support it.

If there is a global implication, it is a policy implication. This could happen anywhere, and it is why Pu/U nukes need serious reconsideration.

BS. As I began to explain, the only way you can get rain with greater than natural levels of radiation is if a cloud of dust (not vapor, dust) from the plant gets into the atmosphere and becomes the nuclei for droplet growth. It won't happen any other way. IF this even happens, which is unlikely on anything like a regular basis for all kinds of reasons, you will have a few tiny specks of radioactive material in each raindrop, and these will quickly wash to the sea. To be perfectly honest, the mushroom cloud from a single above-ground detonation will put more radiation into rain at one fell swoop than this plant will put there in 70,000 years.

You cannot read either. I told you I do not support nukes in their present form. I never have. Pu and U-235 fission is recipe for disaster. I do like Thorium reactors as a short term energy solution because they avoid nearly all the problems of U/Pu and the fuel is plentiful.

Fusion I like much better, but our shortsighted politicians have never seen fit to support its development while all that oil money rolls in. Thus, it's still 40-50 years away

Yes, but higher concentrations are demonstrably more likely to cause mutagenesis problems. An average increase in rads above background levels of less than 0.001% in oceanic waters is not going to cause significant increases in cancer anywhere. I do agree with your last point.

Plankton-phytoplankton-krill-etc. Each step in the food chain concentrates the toxic materials. By the time the chain gets to us, there could be problems. Burning coal has made some wild fish inedible due to mercury.

Cesium and strontium dumped into a major ocean current is going to result in an increase in cancer in the North Pacific and most likely a collapse in the seafood industry.

Spent fuel. There used to be a 40' deep tank holding way more spent fuel than it was originally designed for, where the smoke is coming from on the photo.

This morning they finally unassed that old Barge from the old Missy Sippy River Bridge at Vicksburg.They have it suspended above the water with big cranes and chains on two big Boats.They are going to tote it to the Vicksburg Harbor where it will be cut up with cutting torches.That scrap metal will probally be sent to Yapan so it can be turned into Nuked Yapanee cars.

Over there in Russia, somewhere off the Coast of Russia, down under the water, there are (or recently were) a lot of old rusty barrels of spent Nuke fuel/waste under the water.Some of them are leaking Nuke stuff into the water.

I understand the process and the know of the issue; but oceanic mixing over time is pretty good, and significant dilution occurs even as we speak. Do you know of any uptake data on Pu and related contaminants by plankton? I honestly do not know.

And you have to admit - the ubiquity and longevity of coal burning (kajillions of tons over several centuries) GREATLY exceeds by multiple orders of magnitude those same factors as applied to nukes in general or this one in particular. Mercury in the global environment is common and widespread; same with radon gas. The same will never be true of Pu or U235, at least from an accident of this type.

We need to keep this in perspective. In terms of global effects, we currently have problems that really make this one a piker. That is not say we should be concerned about Japan and vicinity; but compared to all the other things we are faced with daily in NAm, for example, this appears to be an insignificant blip.

I live on the West Coast NAm too - and I just don't see any numbers that create concern in my mind.

From the ARRL Web site itself:

http://www.arrl.org/arrl-periodicals-archive-search

"About this database. This database contains an index of articles for QST from 1915 to the present, QEX from 1981 to the present, Ham Radio from 1968 to 1990 and NCJ from 1973 to the present. (Note: Beginning in 1998, each issue of QEX covers two months. This index shows the first month. For example, the index shows the January/February 1998 issue of QEX as Jan 1998 QEX.)"

So, the index covers anything for which I'd be interested. But I am more interested in obtaining past articles. Then there is this:

"QST Archive for Members Only - ARRL Members can access the QST magazine archive online, from December 1915 through December 2007."

Also:

"ARRL Periodicals on CD-ROM - Recent volumes of QST magazine and back issues of QEX, NCJ and Ham Radio magazines are available on CD-ROM."

I guess this means that, if you want to get articles later than 2007, then you must buy the CD.

Thanks for spurring my research on this. Now I will re-evaluate the importance of remaining a member.

I think the CIA is OK. I'd fear the Air Force and all the loony

I kinda thought that was what I was doing by being a member.

I've been paying:

ARRL membership $39
QEX for members $24

Total $63

If I drop my ARRL membership the cost would be:

ARRL membership $00
QEX non-member $36

Total $36

Almost a 43% reduction in cost to get the cream of publications. Of course, I'd be giving up QST. Somehow, that doesn't bother me too much.

I re-joined ARRL a few years back after having let my membership lapse because of what I considered a lack of technical articles in QST. I was primarily a member to get QST. After my membership expired again, I got boatloads of mailings from ARRL, begging me to come back and even offering a choice of a book to get me to come back. I mailed back their letters with a hand written note saying I wasn't interested. They asked me why. I said QST isn't nearly technical enough for me anymore. They suggested I get QEX. So I made a "counter-offer"...I asked them to substitute QEX for QST. They basically laughed and said they couldn't do that. Seems it would have saved them some money as QEX only comes out 6 timers per year versus 12 for QST. So, now they get NO money from me...

It appears from the etymological link that in this case, "deserts" is a variant of "deserves." Please forgive me, either for my poor typing skills or for my modest misinterpretation of the phrase - your choice :-)

them it belongs to the Water Works dept of the city.

What do you tell them?

Universal has it listed as $999.95. It weighs just 380 grams. It has a hot front end,according to the specs and reviews . It is NOT a 'pretty low end' receiver in my book .

Maybe if I start goin to the Boats (lets see ''them'' figure that out, Boats) I might Win me some Wealth.Nearest Boats are over there on the Missy Sippy River at Vicksburg, I think so, over there where those two Camels are.I could be an Uber backwater hick.Or I could go to one of the Choctaw Indian Reservations.

Men acquitted over threat to burn Bible, Koran

No further punishment will come to three conservative Hindu men who proclaimed that they planned to burn the Bible and the Koran outside the federal parliament building in Bern late last year.

A judge ruled the men did not break Swiss laws on freedom of faith and religious practice in announcing their intention to burn religious books.

The men were arrested before the protest could go forward, but were released two days later.

The judge did order the men to pay half the court costs for the proceedings, but also ordered payment to them for time spent in custodyï¿½which came out to just about equal amounts.

The protest centered around the menï¿½s claim that the Bible and Koran encourage violence and contain pornographic content.

The trio first publicly called for a ban on young people reading the Koran and the Bible.

It's an Open Drainage Ditch System versus an Underground {Hidden] Street Drain Pipe System.

Some Towns/Cities Run Two Systems :
1 - A Sewage Waste System {Underground Closed Hidden Pipes}
2 - A Street Rain Water System {Surface Ditches a/o Underground Pipes}

San Francisco [C&C] is the Biggest Waste Water
Polluter in the SF Bay Area runs a Single Pipe System with Sewage-Waste Washed Directly into the Bay and Ocean when it rains heavily.

Well, OK...maybe they did lie...just a little. Like lying us into two phony wars, 5000 dead American kids, thousands of maimings and a Trillion dollars. But hey, what's a few little harmless white lies among Republicans?

It flipped him over that shaft, his pants were torn to pieces, otherwise it didn't hurt him much.He said it happened so fast.Another guy who worked at Delta Cotton Oil, he climbed about 25 - 30 feet up a ladder and he fell down and hit the concrete floor.It knocked him out for quite a while.I had to climb several Ladders every two hours, with a clipboard and write down what the gages up there said, at the end of my shift every day I turned that paper in to the office.

As I hope you've divined by now, I have no attachment whatever to the increasingly despicable Republicans.

But it does seem odd, even perverse, to me that anyone harmed by the actions of another would immediately run to the biggest band of criminals in North America -- the "legislators" and "regulators" in Washington -- as a solution.

Such a "solution" usually involves totally uncaring careerist bureaucrats (I've met a couple from OSHA and they were, frankly, disgusting) and pettifogging regulations that punish -- enslave would be a better word -- _everyone_ for the stupid actions of a few. Surely there is a better way.

Common law juries with no limits on awards would be a far better approach. (Of course, we'd need sharp, intelligent jurors to do it that way -- an increasingly rare commodity in dumbed-down Amurrica.)

As ever,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

QST is about the ads. QEX appeals to people who are pretty immune to ads.

I was confused. I was thinking of this one, which is pretty much the same.

http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/commrxvr/0106.html

A "hot" front end would definitely benefit from an attenuator upstream.
A preselector would work too, unless you were "panning".

Fuck you. If that were true I would have mentioned it.

My brain is in a completely different place when I think about quasi-SDRs. I think of the Elecraft as an old-school analog radio, with an on-board digital modulator/demodulator.

The Perseus is a front end and an interface to DirectX 10. All the work is done in the PC.

The rain water drains into drainage ditches.My driveway and other driveways around here have underground culverts.There are underground sewer lines too.We aren't as backwater hick as Hollyweird likes to Stereotype the old South.

I needs to go to the post office (after stopping off at the Goodwill store first, of course) and snail mail that Happy Birthday card to that married Irish woman wayyyyyyyy over yonder across the big pond.And then to the Lowe's store for some wood and screws.

It is not that I do not like the ARRL. I've been a member for many years.

But, just being a member doesn't pay for that support. Notice from the cost of membership shown on the ARRL site that only $8 per year is left over after paying for QST. I'd bet that that $8 barely pays them to maintain their records and Web site. What they apparently depend on for money to represent us in Washington is donations. Along with volunteers, perhaps.

So, does this mean that those of us who do not send in donations are missing the big picture?

Well, I overlooked the revenue generated by ads in QST. It is probably true that a greater membership means a greater magazine circulation which means ads can garner more because they reach a greater audience.

I just wanted that on record to show I am not advocating discontinuing membership.

Old country boy from Edwards,Mississippi! he couldn't even find the Oil Drain Plug on his own lawn mower, he got back to his house (wherever the Sheet he went, who cares? I don't care!) at the same time I got back to my house from the Goodwill store and the Lowe's store and the Murphy USA gas station at that Dangerous Walmart store (I put an 8 ounce plastic bottle of Star Tron in my van's gas tank and I filled up the tank with Ethanol http://www.starbrite.com) and the post office.Instead of going into his house, he sat on his porch to see what I bought at the Lowe's store.He could see me unloading those ten 1'' by 2'' by 8 feet long strips of wood I bought at the Lowe's store.He couldn't see what was in that plastic Lowe's store bag so I told him.
I bought a package of two 60 Watt Incandescant ceiling fan light light bulbs (but I don't have a ceiling fan.I use them in a little old Lamp) and a box of 1 1/8'' drywall screws at the Lowe's store.
I also bought an old plug it in the wall electric wall clock that dates back to the 1950s-1960s ($2.00) at the Goodwill store, but I didn't tell old country boy from Edwards,Mississippi! about that.

There was no warning.

It began long ago. The unspeakable thing called Roosevelt arrested innocent dissidents who were exposing his warmongering. That illegal incarceration and prosecution eventually came to be called the Great Sedition Trials.

Long before that, Abraham Lincoln arrested the legislature of Maryland and imprisoned them in Fort McHenry (the harbor near which, ironically, was the location of the composition of the Star-Spangled Banner) because he believed they were about to "vote wrongly." Many rational Americans place the beginning of the total illegitimacy of the regime in Washington on that fateful day.

Those are only two of millions of such crimes committed by the criminal regime in Washington. And Russell Means could tell you of how _his_ people were treated by that regime, just as I tell you of how our people have been cheated and enslaved and imprisoned and killed by those who squat by the bloody Potomac and pretend to be the government of the United States.

And the Iraqis and Afghans who trusted the regime will soon be finding out just how trustworthy Washington is. I hope that they escape with their lives.

And that's not even counting the millions of innocent dead who were killed when the regime in Washington made direct war on them, and who are still dying today, every day.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

I wonder now if the Devil made California build those reactors right on the San Andreas fault. I heard they built them there because the land was cheap.

Then again, it could be just stupidity, as evidenced by this sort of Leonard Cohen's song is not easily understood (good lyrics isn't supposed to be easy). But the line "they sentence me 20 years of boredom" make associations to myself having spent 20 years on the Net; having to wade through very boring stuff to get to the gems.

That was just before Roosevelt gave half of Europe to the commies. The betrayed people, rightfully or wrongfully, suspected Roosevelt of being a Jewish agent acting to further the spread of worldwide Bolshevism.

Most of the people being persecuted in the US 'trials' were either Catholics, or thought to have fascist leanings. They all shared an apparent anti communist streak.

It was also rumoured at the time, according to my Mom (a usually reliable source), that Roosevelt either committed suicide or was killed to hush things up. That would tie in well with the murder of Patton.

I lived in Houston for 17 years. The old neighborhoods have ditches, the new neighborhoods just use the streets for stormwater. I've seen it

I've heard that there are many nuclear reactors along the San Andreas fault so we could be in another nuclear crisis like Japan. I think the United States is pretty good with tracking earthquakes before hand, especially in a place that could potentially have an earthquake. And it depends on where the earthquake is to decide whether you'll be affected.

Of the more than 100 nuclear reactors in the US, only the two at Diablo Canyon Power Plant on the central California coast, are in a high-activity area. The Humboldt Bay plant on California's northern coast, was shut down in 1976 because of earthquake fears but still holds some spent nuclear fuel on the site.

Being in a seismically active area is not quite the same as being on a fault line. Fault rupture is, at any given time, a more serious issue to local buildings than the ensuing ground shaking - it will break your structure in two; but if you are not on a fault line, then shaking is your key problem if you are not in danger of a landslide, tsunami or liquefaction. A building can be built to withstand almost any foreseeable level of shake.

Yes, I understand that very well. However, they should have more money

First of all, you seem to be putting the cart before the horse when you say "anyone harmed by the actions of another". The whole point of agencies like OSHA is to keep people from being harmed in the first place. If the OSHA mandated belt guards were installed, Coohoo's buddy would not have been sucked in in the first place.

Finally, "odd, even perverse" is your opinion of regulators.

Personally, I'm sort of glad that we have agencies like the FDA and the FAA, to name just two. Are they perfect? Heck, no. Are they better than taking your chances with private businesses driven by greed? In my opinion...yes, waaay better.

Please remember that these regulatory agencies came into being solely because of scandals and disasters usually caused by the carelessness and/or greed of private businesses wanting to save a buck (like not installing the belt guards).

I'm basing this opinion on the ARRL budgets that were published in QST about 20 years ago. They currently (still) claim they are there for mainly 2 things, protecting our rights and privileges as operators and adding new operators through education and other methods. Unless they have gotten rid of all the bits they used to have that they didn't need, they are still spending between 2 and 5% of the money they collect on what's supposed to be the main goal.

Where does all the rest go? Read the budgets if they still make them available.

Charlatans then, are they now? I don't know. And don't care. They lost me.

No, these agencies came into being as a political response to headlines borne of scandals and disasters. That is a significant distinction. As such, there is a political element to their operation, as well as their priorities. They are to be no more trusted than the entities they were created to regulate.

I remember being on site during an OSHA inspection of a drafting firm I worked at in the late mid 70's. The OSHA representative threatened to write us up over several electrical violations in the closet housing the fuse box and mains switch. Apparently, no one had told her that the third wire to the case on screw terminal was a ground, and that the exposed nature of the connection to the grounding tang was actually code. She insisted that the wire be removed at once from that screw tang and be capped off. When we tried to tell her that doing so would create an electrical hazard throughout the building, she threatened to shut the business down until we complied. So, we turned off all the electrical devices, gave everyone the rest of the day off, our house engineer removed the offending wire, and she gave us a passing evaluation.

She left, we put the wire back, and restarted the building.

OSHA, and other agencies like them, are a good idea in principle. I have no problem, there. But, in practice, they are more obstacle than barrier, and their political nature makes them impervious to facts.

There has got to be a better way. Sadly, because the creation of these agencies is politically motivated, there is no political will to find one.

Many years ago, almost all factories in America had a Lot of machines/machinery which was driven by big flat belts, usually Leather belts, I think.In a Lot of situations it was impractible to rig up belt guards.It was like/similar to that when I worked at Delta Cotton Oil.Delta Cotton Oil was closed down and torn down a bunch of years ago.An apartment building complex sits in that area now.

What did the damn fools arrest him for?

Was he abusing or molesting the gator in an unacceptable manner? Or, the government owns Noah and can tell him what to do? Was he walking the gator on a leash and it was a danger to children?

Regards,
JS

Can't speak for wherever this took place, but I know that in some states (TX, LA, FL) gators are a protected species, and in many others they are illegal to have as pets. As to why the gator was shot, I have no clue. As a rule, they are relocated to native habitat.

Pretty well identical with the UK situation. The RSGB have lost many, many members for these reasons - including me.

tom, just my personal opinion, but too bad you left the ARRL and too bad you don't care.

I don't know about your "2 to 5%" figure, but even if it is true, it's exactly 2 to 5% more than any other organization is spending to go to bat for ham radio...and IMHO, we NEED (and should support) a national organization.

ï¿½The greenhouse gas footprint for shale gas is greater than that for conventional gas or oil when viewed on any time horizon, but particularly so over 20 years. Compared to coal, the footprint of shale gas is at least 20% greater and perhaps more than twice as great on the 20-year horizon and is comparable when compared over 100 yearsï¿½ These methane emissions are at least 30% more than and perhaps more than twice as great as those from conventional gas. The higher emissions from shale gas occur at the time wells are hydraulically fractured -- as methane escapes from flow-back return fluids -- and during drill out following the fracturing.ï¿½

Surface cracking is localized. It is not the actual fault opening up.
EQs occur a mile or more below the surface.

A lot of factories had one big motor at the end of the building. It drove a shaft that extended through the structure. They'd use the belts to drive machines where they were located. There would be multi-step pulleys where more than one speed was needed and the operator would slide the belt over with a stick to change the ratios.

The last time I saw one of those belt setups working was in the late '60s. It was in a place that made prosthesis stuff for the disfigured.

I'm not sure if they are still protected - I think their numbers have rebounded in those states to levels where limited hunting is now permitted. There may also be a law that it is illegal to possess a wild animal (like a deer or bear or mockingbird or tree frog) or a nonnative wildlife species (like a ferret) without a special and not especially easy-to-get permit - in California, I know this is true.
Pet Insects and spiders are often given a pass as long as they are not agricultural pests.

Shooting the gator was just an act of ignorance...the root cause of the sad fate of billions of abnimals, unfortunately. I think anyone who keeps a large dangerous reptile wandering around his apartment is certifiable anyway, but I agree, I see no need to have arrested him.
Again, an act of overzealoous ignorance. (Having said that, I am ignorant of all the facts in the case, so that's just a from-the-hip assessment).

It won't happen until they kill every other living species first. The last domesticated animal on earth to be killed will be a Palestinian's goat, immediately before it's owner gets an Uzi bullet in the back of the head.

The Americans are dealing with the 'tree' problem. One of the last few US Environment Ministers, under Bush, claimed Jesus will return when the last tree is cut down. The converse of that belief is that if you plant trees, you're working for the devil.

We know something's horribly wrong when that pinnacle of humanity, Bush, comes out with "Fish and mankind can coexist peacefully". Sounds like a major betrayal is on the way.

First, we need to cure your ignorance, a COLB is NOT a birth certificate. Here is page to explain the difference:
http://www.theobamafile.com/obamacolb.htm

.....
obama was born in Kenya, Africa:
http://www.wnd.com/?pageId=254401
http://www.obamacitizenshipfacts.org/http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hvrb7YqdvxE http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=M7BLOcpceRY&feature=related

At around 4:20 into this audio, obamas' grandmother is asked if obama was born in Kenya, Africa, she says yes:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=JlFc4wCpvSo&feature=related

What is so difficult to understand?
Abercrombie, the Hawaiian governor, says it doesn't exist:
http://www.wnd.com/?pageId=252833

A Hawaiian election clerk, who had access to the birth records, looked, he has filed an affidavit stating, quite plainly, the birth certificate DOES NOT EXIST:
http://www.wnd.com/?pageId=254401
I think that is enough evidence for any court, judge and jury!

Correct, but you may want to come up to the Bay Area and see what has happened at Point Reyes, Los Trancos and elsewhere. It may be surface cracking, but the ground does open up, and the two sides exhibit significant displacement in three dimensions. Whether it is the actual fault is immaterial - it will disassemble structures. I'm sure you guys have examples in SoCal, and there are some seriously spectacular scarps in Nevada and down near Carrizo Plain, if I'm not mistaken.

Home of the '419' Scam strikes again:

One of Nigeria's most influential and wealthy politicians, James Ibori, has been charged in London with 25 offences relating to money laundering and fraud.

The former governor of oil-rich Delta state was extradited from Dubai to the UK to face the charges.

He was arrested in Dubai last May and lost an appeal against his extradition. He denies allegations of corruption.

Mr Ibori is a senior figure in Nigeria's governing People's Democratic Party (PDP).

He was due to appear at a London court on Saturday, Scotland Yard said.

Mr Ibori played a key role in the 2007 presidential election victory of Umaru Yar'Adua, who died last year.

Under Nigeria's federal system, state governors enjoy wide powers.

Those running oil-rich states have budgets larger than those of some African countries.

They enjoy immunity from prosecution while in power, but several have faced corruption charges since leaving office after the last election in 2007.

Nigerians are going to the polls on Saturday for presidential elections.

Why? If every ham just wrote to their elected officials (for the cost of a stamp, or free by email), they would get the message just as well, if not better than, if they got 1 letter or a personal visit from the ARRL "lobbyist".

To all radio amateurs

SB PROP ARL ARLP015
ARLP015 Propagation de K7RA

The daily sunspot number reached a new high for Solar Cycle 24 on Wednesday, April 13, 2011, when it hit 153. I looked back over this calendar year, and saw that the previous high was 137 on March 8, 2011, 16 points lower than Wednesday. That week was reported in our Propagation Forecast Bulletin ARLP010 (see http://snurl.com/27snys), which said, "The last time the daily sunspot number was higher than this was July 7, 2005, when it was 149."

I knew I would have to inspect sunspot numbers prior to that date to find something higher, which would be on the after-the-peak down-side of Solar Cycle 23. I went to the http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpdir/indices/old_indices/2005_DSD.txt link and only had to look two days earlier to July 5, 2005, when it was 181. In fact, the day prior to that was even higher, 192. If you look at that table, you can see that around the end of June and early July 2005 the Sun produced a good burst of activity on Cycle 23's down side. You can read a bulletin from early July 2005 at http://snurl.com/27snzj.

Apparently at that time we must have assumed that we were already near a low point in the sunspot cycle, but did not know that five years later we would still be waiting for a significant increase in sunspot activity. The bulletin mentions this was the most activity seen since November 26, 2003.

The average sunspot number for the past week rose 21.6 points, from 68.3 to 89.9. Average daily solar flux declined though, by 2.6 points to 109.2.

Eight new sunspot groups emerged this week. There was one new group on April 7, two more on April 8, another new one on April 11, two more on April 12, and another new group on Wednesday, April 13, and yet another on April 14.

Predicted solar flux values from NOAA/USAF for the near term have increased since the forecast in the ARRL Letter on Thursday. Predicted solar flux is 125 and 128 on April 15-16, 130 on April 17-19, and 135 on April 20-21 and 115 on April 22-23. Planetary A index for the same period is predicted to be 5 on April 15-17, 7 and 10 on April 18-19, and 5 on April 20-27. Geophysical Institute Prague predicts quiet geomagnetic conditions April 15-17, quiet to unsettled April 18, active conditions April 19, and unsettled conditions April 20-21.

On April 12 a solar wind stream hit Earth, causing aurora to be visible across the northern tier states in the U.S. The high latitude College A index hit 39, and planetary A index was 23. The next period of higher geomagnetic activity predicted by NOAA/USAF is April 28-29, with a planetary A index of 12 and 15.

Jon Jones, N0JK of Wichita, Kansas reports, "I heard OA4TT (Peru) on 50.135 MHz on April 4 at 2020z. KN5O in LA had OA4TT in strong, was weak for me. Perhaps direct F2 to the Gulf Coast then weak Es on to KS. KN5O is on my great circle bearing to Peru."

Jeff Hartley, N8II of Shepherdstown, West Virginia reports, "There have been plenty of recent propagation surprises. Last Friday, April 8, K3SWZ near Harrisburg, PA reported to me working DU9RG on 10 meter SSB at 2348z. Sunset here was 2343Z. I didn't find Robin, but did work first VK6 of Cycle 24 on 10 meters, VK6DU on SSB around 2350z. There were several other eastern VKs and ZLs with good signals on 10 around the same time.

"I have worked 5N7M around 2300z on 10 CW and he is frequently on 10 and 12 meters very late for him right around the bottom of the band. I heard him as late as 0044z with a good signal on 12 meters last night, then he went down to the bottom of 15 CW around 0100z. 5M2TT (Liberia) was running a big pile-up on 17 meters SSB around 0000z and was worked on Monday around 2330z on both 10 meters phone and CW. 15 has been regularly open to JA in our evenings this week and was still open at 0110z last night. Earlier in the week I had a 'run' of JAs on 15 CW around 2330z with signals up to S9, not an every day event for this QTH with about the poorest prop to JA in the USA (beam heading is 330)."

To Japan, Jeff is over 6,800 miles. From K7RA in Seattle it is about 4,900 miles at 300 degrees.

Dick Grubb, W0QM of Boulder, Colorado suggested that in addition to the STEREO web site at http://stereo.gsfc.nasa.gov/, another view is at http://snurl.com/27so8j. This image shows the same data that are displayed at the first site, but flattened out instead of the spinning globe.

Sunspot numbers for April 7 through 13 were 73, 97, 56, 56, 80, 114, and 153, with a mean of 89.9. 10.7 cm flux was 112.3, 108.7, 105, 104.8, 105.8, 110.3, and 117.8, with a mean of 109.2. Estimated planetary A indices were 6, 8, 10, 5, 9, 23, and 14, with a mean of 10.7. Estimated mid-latitude A indices were 4, 5, 4, 3, 5, 14, and 10, with a mean of 6.4.

This news is certain to rattle policymakers in Washington who have promoted gas as a solution to our energy crisis. The Cornell paper is a game changer, and its release this week should command the attention of everyone concerned about our energy future.

The peer-reviewed paper, authored by Cornell experts Robert Howarth, Anthony Ingraffea and Renee Santoro, is expected to be published later this week in the journal Climatic Change.

And, if you missed the point, which I can rest assured, you did, you are not required to be a natural born citizen to get a passport, fool.

How do you expect anyone to take you seriously with off the wall comments which have no sane relevance to the conversation under way?

a) It was given in response to another poster that said Obama lies. Possibly, but I was refreshing their memory of Bush's lies. (How quickly they forget).

b) I also mention it because Bush's lies had major economic consequences, major loss of life consequences for this country and major damage to our reputation throughout the world; e.g, the Mayor of London, England warning George W. Bush not to come there because there was a good chance he would be arrested as...ahem, how to say this politely...a war criminal.

Although Bush is gone, the horrible consequences of his lies linger on...and on...and on, almost TEN years and still counting.

Just my personal opinion, but I believe it is quite naive to think that if "every ham just wrote". Extremely unlikely...and oh, if not the ARRL, just who do you think is going to tell the hams to write and what to

Finally, it's quite naive to think that a national lobbying organization

Well, as one of my old calculus professors was fond of saying, "You have an intuitive grasp of the obvious". A government agency is political? Gee, whatta surprise! Even in the private sector, I will presume you have heard of office "politics". It's human nature to be "political".

News flash!!!

ANY, repeat ANY, organization, government OR private, has its share of incompetents. But don't let this cause you to throw out the baby with the bath water.

Perhaps you overlooked what I said above, so here it is again:

>> Are they [regulatory agencies] perfect? Heck, no.

In addition to politics, greed seems to be an even bigger part of the human condition. Given a choice between NO regulation to counter-balance the greed versus a regulatory body, however imperfect, I will go with regulation every time.

Liberty Net: April 9, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/04/liberty-net-april-9-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

SUMMERTIME STATIC came crashing in early this year, but W1WCR and N2IRJ ï¿½ through their extraordinary antenna technology ï¿½ were able to copy all but the weakest check-ins to the latest Liberty Net. And, as the ionosphere heats up, so does the discussion of important issues that are covered up or distorted in the public media.

Here are just a few of the topics discussed and debated during the latest session of the longest-running discussion net on the amateur radio airwaves:

ï¿½ When radiation levels rise to unsafe levels, whatï¿½s a government to do? Just raise the legal definition of ï¿½safe,ï¿½ thatï¿½s what ï¿½ and, magically, everyoneï¿½s out of danger. (18 minutes)

ï¿½ The Black race huckster, the ï¿½Reverendï¿½ Al Sharpton, is millions of dollars in arrears for federal taxes. Most White folks, especially patriot-oriented White folks, would be in jail in similar circumstances. So, what did Obama do with regard to the ï¿½Reverendï¿½? He spoke at one of his conferences ï¿½ and gave him a $1.5 million tax break. (45 minutes)

ï¿½ The illegal war in Afghanistan continues to claim the lives of misled American soldiers. More than 64% of those deaths have occurred under the administration of a man who ran on an obviously insincere anti-war platform. (50 minutes)

ï¿½ The leftist Black writer Cornel West was recently interviewed by both Al Jazeera and Russia Today. His topic: Obama the Shill. Is there a new confluence of left and right, or what? (1 hour 1 minute)

ï¿½ He virtually worshipped the Jewish-Zionist power structure ï¿½ but he refused to take _all_ of their orders ï¿½ so Glenn Beck is out at Fox News. (1 hour 21 minutes)

ï¿½ Speaking of the Jewish establishment, is neocon William Kristolï¿½s desire to cozy up to Obama ï¿½ now that he is a ï¿½war presidentï¿½ ï¿½ a factor in Beckï¿½s departure? (1 hour 30 minutes)

ï¿½ The positions taken by a newly ï¿½independentï¿½ Glenn Beck may well depend on who finances his new ventures. Watch for his position on the current illegal wars for Zionism: A flip from Murdoch-style warmongering may indicate real independence. (1 hour 33 minutes)

ï¿½ With the rise of Rupert Murdochï¿½s sons in his News Corporation empire, expect some modifications in the neocon party line at Fox and the Wall Street Journal, but no diminution in the promotion of Zionism and multiracialism. (1 hour 34 minutes)

All of you are also forgetting that the ARRL (for better or worse) is now the 'back bone' of the system that handles testing for ham licenses.
Without them it would be almost impossible to find where you can locally take the test to apply for or upgrade your ham ticket. The ARRL also publishes most of the test guide material (though I would be surprised if it wasn't also available on line). Finally they have a good line of excellent technical publications on radio and electronics technology.

Also they DO offer membership without QST, for additional members of a family. Maybe the price of that will give you an idea of what they think the membership itself is worth.

Yes, and the blind can get a membership without QST for $8, same as a family member without QST. That was where I got my number from in another post in this thread.

Again, I am not suggesting anyone give up their membership in the ARRL.

The ARRL seems to have little to do with the most important part of getting new hams, licensing.

The National VEC page, http://www.ncvec.org, apparently doesn't even acknowledge the ARRL.

You have to search the site and get to Question Pool 3 to find the first hint of the ARRL, and it's an email address for WY1O, who seems quite dedicated and appears several more times. And he's all there is.

So much for making new hams.

Well, if hams won't take any initiative to write their Congressmen, then they probably don't give two craps enough to really care if we lose bandwidth. All proposed NPRMs are published in the Federal Register and a simple search on their website for "FCC" will list them.

So, the ARRL is donating how much to political parties?

The NRA has donated a bit over $18 million from 1989-2010. They were number 39 of the top 140 donors...
39 National Rifle Assn $18,209,746 17%(To Dems) 82% (To Repubs)
THAT'S probably why they are so successful. Money talks, BS Walks...

http://www.opensecrets.org/orgs/list.php

Didn't see the ARRL in the top 140. Searched and didn't find them on the list at all. #140 donated about $4.7 million over the same period.

If the ARRL is so successful at lobbying, why did BPL go through even though they begged members to send more money to fight against it and lost the battle anyway? Remember when the 13cm band used to be 2300-2450 MHz? I do. Remember when the 1.25M band used to be 220-225 MHz. I do. Remember when a lot of foreign countries had no code requirement for HF and we did? I do.

I'm not saying they aren't worth something, but why won't they give a guy a choice about which magazine he wants with his membership?
Probably because QEX doesn't have so many ads as QST and they want the advertisers to get more bang for their buck (understandably, since they can charge more for ad space based on the number of magazine "subscribers")

Don't forget W5YI as a VEC. That's who I'm affiliated with, although I'm not active with any VEC at present. They list VEs by state, so you can find a local examiner.

Yes, so I would almost say they are more in the publishing business than the lobbying business.

So, can I just pay for membership and skip QST?

I believe they are required by the IRS to set a "value" on membership if they are a non-profit. They are a non-profit, aren't they?

Huh? It's really not clear what you are saying. Have you visited the ARRL web site?

Here are some of the sections they have listed relating to developing new hams under the "Licensing, Education & Training" tab:

*FCC License Info & Forms

ARRL can provide helpful FCC information about licensing requirements, forms, fees and regulations.

*Getting Licensed

Get the information you need to get started: find a class or study materials and prepare for your licensing exam. Already licensed?
Take the next step and upgrade.

*Volunteer Examiner Coordinator

The ARRL Volunteer Examiner Coordinator (VEC) offers resources for finding an exam session, becoming a volunteer examiner and VE Team support.

*Volunteer Instructors/Mentors

*ARRL Courses & Training

ARRL training materials and online classes have been developed to help you learn at your own pace.

*FCC License Info & Forms

ARRL can provide helpful FCC information about licensing requirements, forms, fees and regulations.

*Get on the Air

You've got your license, now what? Find resources to help you set up your first station, get on the air and have fun! Learn More

Volunteer opportunities, recruitment and unique ways to support Amateur Radio advocacy.

o Amateur Radio in the Classroom

This sure seems like a lot of stuff for a group that you claim is not supposed to be interested in beginners.

> The National VEC page, http://www.ncvec.org, apparently doesn't even > acknowledge the ARRL.

Again, huh? This site is "unto themselves". They don't seem to acknowledge ANY group except themselves. Sorry, but IMHO, a totally bogus point.

> So much for making new hams.

One more time...Huh?

They DO have a VE program (I AM one), they have an Educational program to bring ham radio to kids in the class room, they set up space station contacts for kids in classrooms, they have a Volunteer Instructor program to teach people how to be instructors for training new hams, they have volunteer mentors, almost every article in QST has a "Hamspeak" section to explain unique ham terms to beginners.

Finally, what makes you think they don't want new hams? It would be in their best interest and longevity to have more new hams. Why would they shoot themselves in the foot by not wanting new hams?

The only thing that IS clear to me is that you have not read QST in a long time, have not been to their web site in a long time and seem to have a real grudge against them for whatever reason (certainly your prerogative). But you DO demonstrably have your facts wrong about them doing nothing to encourage new hams.

I would respectfully suggest that you visit their site, arrl.org, and at the main page choose the "Licensing, Education and Training" tab to see just how much they ARE doing to cultivate new hams. (Admittedly a tough job in the Internet Age, but contrary to what you are saying, they ARE trying).

Joe

From April 13, to April 16, the Lakeville school district in Minnesota is sending its teachers to the 12th annual "White Privilege Conference."

http://us1.campaign-archive1.com/?u=4dfbda3b6fdf050b39f73d09a&id=ad2ae12d38&e=3609fe9ad7

Yes, it is as bad as it sounds. To quote the article: "The conference is ‘built on the premise that the U.S was started by white people, for white people.' Its mission is to get participants to confront their biases in a ‘journey in understanding white supremacy, whiteness, privilege, power and oppression.' And to agree to take action in (their) own circle of power.'" At workshops participants will "discuss how white privilege, white supremacy, and oppression affects daily life."

This seems pretty straightforward. The premise is that all white people are bad. I wonder why this isn't called the "Racist Propaganda Conference" instead. Of course, they would never admit that that is what they are doing. Leftists never do. They would just claim that they are just trying to make people aware of "differences".

These people are not innocent of political indoctrination either. The keynote speaker at the 2009 conference said, that we must look beyond our ‘declining empire' to ‘exciting progressive developments' in Hugo Chavez's Venezuela -- among them, ‘land reform and redistribution of wealth, neighborhood committees, recognition of women's unpaid labor, end of spanking.'"

Isn't it comforting to know that your hard earned tax money is being used to sponsor the promotion of Socialism amongst the very people who stand before your child and influence him day after day? Children look up to their teachers, they think teachers know everything, even more than their parents. And children aren't stupid. The children who have white skin will eventually catch on. For all the promotion of self-esteem these days, what kind of effect do you think this will have on your child when he gets the message that his mind doesn't matter-but his skin color does?

Don't think this kind of propaganda doesn't come back to the classroom. It does.

Charlotte Cushman is a Montessori educator at Minnesota Renaissance School, Anoka, Minnesota and has been involved in the study of Ayn Rand's philosophy since 1970.

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - http://mises.org/midroad.asp

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - 1952 - http://mises.org/books/planningforfreedom_mises.pdf

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau’s Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

“The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, ‘this is mine,’ and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society.”

Added Rousseau: “How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!”

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term “liberalism” (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning “pertaining to a free man”) first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to “liberal” causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition, the left is neither “liberal” nor “progressive,” but rather a reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical liberalism.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

You really are a pip. The who world is radioactive! Thorium is super common and everywhere! Radon is everywhere! And you comment about putting it in a glass jar under your bed or wherever is just beyond the pale stupid. Do you put coal or gasoline or methane in jar by your bed? Of course not!

Yes, the main isotope of thorium is very long-lived. So what? It's out there! The far more important thing about Thorium reactors is that the waste has a SHORT half life, one that is eminently manageable compared to anything else we produce.

Stop being such a fearmongering demagogue and start actually learning about what you talk about. Dufus.

That's true of many radioactive isotopes. So don't eat it or breathe it.

Regular reactors have limited lifespans too. Thorium does not need to be a forever technology...just to get us over the hump to renewables and maybe fusion.

The Land/Territory of Arkansas (Alaska too) is Millions/Billions of Years old.Arkansas is a Beautiful U.S.State.Arkansas is not a s-hithole.

Dallas is farther South than San Diego.Big deal, so what? doggy's couch is father South (South is Always Best) than both of those two U.S.Cities.Miami is one of the Coolest Cities in America.Due to the Maritime effect, Miami has never seen 100 degrees before.It is cold and windy outside, I might not work in my attic today.I didn't work in my attic yesterday either, ergo yesterday morning when I was washing my face, a tiny piece of that ragged old wash rag got in my right eyeball, it is still bugging the hell out of my right eyeball.I might wind up having to go to the eyeball clinic at G.V.''Sonny'' Montgomery VA Medical Center and let somebody work my right eyeball.Doggy's couch has seen over 100 degrees buku times before.Part of Tennessee is West of the Mississippi River.

They have to get rid of the carbolic acid masquerading as ground water before they can get the gas. Some wells have been dumping the toxic water into the surrounding ditches/fields/streams for over two years.

The 'fracing' is used to break up underground layers of shale or whatever is keeping the gas stratified. When the strata is disturbed, the aquifer take a beating, the clean water gets mixed in with the filth. It ruins wells for miles around.

Some aquifer has a replacement time in the tens of thousand years.

The entire operation is filthy form the start to finish. More corrupt politicians let this begin and continue.

I have no doubt someone will call you a nut or fruitcake. That merely means their conscience is bothering them over their share holdings.

- You really are a pip. The who world is radioactive!
- Thorium is super common and everywhere!
- Radon is everywhere!

All True True True -and- They Are Greatly Dispersed
-thus- Relatively Safe in their Natural Global Environment
-until- Man Refines and Concentrates Them : Creating A Radioactive Deadly Danger Zone/Area Called a Nuclear Plant -oops- Another Inconvenient Truth !

NO BUTT : I Do-Do Have a Few Lumps of Coal in the Fire Box next to the Wood Stove; and a 4 Cubic Foot Bin [2-Bags] of Coal out behind the Garage :o)
- Yes, the main isotope of thorium is very long-lived.
- So what?

So It Is A Generational Radioactive Toxic Poison to Humans and other Life-Forms. -save-the-planet-:o)-
- It's out there!

That It Is & Greatly Dispersed and Thus Relatively Safe
AS IS [.] -so-don't-mess-with-it-
- The far more important thing about Thorium reactors
- is that the waste has a SHORT half life, one that is
- eminently manageable compared to anything else
- we produce.

Yep That Is True : Thorium Is Just About Everywhere

Radioactive {Concentrated} Dangerous and Deadly Toxic Poisonous : NUCLEAR POWER PLANT !

Is Way Way Too Too Much Per Kilo-Watt ! -killer-cost-

i cannot help what shape your brain is in, its a retardation, it might be environmental, or genes, its hard to say. but its been quite well reported what rand was. its just to complex for you to understand.

snicker, i have always felt this was the case:

Everyone knows that liberals and conservatives butt heads when it comes to world views, but scientists have now shown that their brains are actually built differently.

Liberals have more gray matter in a part of the brain associated with understanding complexity, while the conservative brain is bigger in the section related to processing fear, said the study on Thursday in Current Biology.

"We found that greater liberalism was associated with increased gray matter volume in the anterior cingulate cortex, whereas greater conservatism was associated with increased volume of the right amygdala," the study said.

Other research has shown greater brain activity in those areas, according to which political views a person holds, but this is the first study to show a physical difference in size in the same regions.

"Previously, some psychological traits were known to be predictive of an individual's political orientation," said Ryota Kanai of the University College London, where the research took place.

"Our study now links such personality traits with specific brain structure."

The study was based on 90 "healthy young adults" who reported their political views on a scale of one to five from very liberal to very conservative, then agreed to have their brains scanned.

People with a large amygdala are "more sensitive to disgust" and tend to "respond to threatening situations with more aggression than do liberals and are more sensitive to threatening facial expressions," the study said.

Liberals are linked to larger anterior cingulate cortexes, a region that "monitor(s) uncertainty and conflicts," it said.

"Thus, it is conceivable that individuals with a larger ACC have a higher capacity to tolerate uncertainty and conflicts, allowing them to accept more liberal views."

It remains unclear whether the structural differences cause the divergence in political views, or are the effect of them.

But the central issue in determining political views appears to revolve around fear and how it affects a person.

"Our findings are consistent with the proposal that political orientation is associated with psychological processes for managing fear and uncertainty," the study said.

lets not forget, that in 1972 ayn rand wrote "“Morally and

Ayn Rand Railed Against Government Benefits, But Grabbed Social Security and Medicare When She Needed Them
At least she put up a fight before succumbing to the imperatives of the real world.
January 29, 2011 |
Ayn Rand was not only a schlock novelist, she was also the progenitor of a sweeping “moral philosophy” that justifies the privilege of the wealthy and demonizes not only the slothful, undeserving poor but the lackluster middle-classes as well.

Her books provided wide-ranging parables of "parasites," "looters" and "moochers" using the levers of government to steal the fruits of her heroes' labor. In the real world, however, Rand herself received Social Security payments and Medicare benefits under the name of Ann O'Connor (her husband was Frank O'Connor).

As Michael Ford of Xavier University's Center for the Study of the American Dream wrote, “In the end, Miss Rand was a hypocrite but she could never be faulted for failing to act in her own self-interest.”

Her ideas about government intervention in some idealized pristine marketplace serve as the basis for so much of the conservative rhetoric we see today. “The reason I got involved in public service, by and large, if I had to credit one thinker, one person, it would be Ayn Rand,” said Paul Ryan, the GOP's young budget star at a D.C. event honoring the author. On another occasion, he proclaimed, “Rand makes the best case for the morality of democratic capitalism.”

“Morally and economically,” wrote Rand in a 1972 newsletter, “the welfare state creates an ever accelerating downward pull.”

Journalist Patia Stephens wrote of Rand:

[She] called altruism a “basic evil” and referred to those who perpetuate the system of taxation and redistribution as “looters” and “moochers.” She wrote in her book “The Virtue of Selfishness” that accepting any government controls is “delivering oneself into gradual enslavement.”

Rand also believed that the scientific consensus on the dangers of tobacco was a hoax. By 1974, the two-pack-a-day smoker, then 69, required surgery for lung cancer. And it was at that moment of vulnerability that she succumbed to the lure of collectivism.

Evva Joan Pryor, who had been a social worker in New York in the 1970s, was interviewed in 1998 by Scott McConnell, who was then the director of communications for the Ayn Rand Institute. In his book, 100 Voices: An Oral History of Ayn Rand, McConnell basically portrays Rand as first standing on principle, but then being mugged by reality. Stephens points to this exchange between McConnell and Pryor.

“She was coming to a point in her life where she was going to receive the very thing she didn’t like, which was Medicare and Social Security,” Pryor told McConnell. “I remember telling her that this was going to be difficult. For me to do my job she had to recognize that there were exceptions to her theory. So that started our political discussions. From there on – with gusto – we argued all the time. The initial argument was on greed,” Pryor continued. “She had to see that there was such a thing as greed in this world. Doctors could cost an awful lot more money than books earn, and she could be totally wiped out by medical bills if she didn’t watch it. Since she had worked her entire life, and had paid into Social Security, she had a right to it. She didn’t feel that an individual should take help.”

Rand had paid into the system, so why not take the benefits? It's true, but according to Stephens, some of Rand's fellow travelers remained true to their principles.

Rand is one of three women the Cato Institute calls founders of American libertarianism. The other two, Rose Wilder Lane and Isabel “Pat” Paterson, both rejected Social Security benefits on principle. Lane, with whom Rand corresponded for several years, once quit an editorial job in order to avoid paying Social Security taxes. The Cato Institute says Lane considered Social Security a “Ponzi fraud” and “told friends that it would be immoral of her to take part in a system that would predictably collapse so catastrophically.” Lane died in 1968.

Paterson would end up dying a pauper. Rand went a different way. But at least she put up a fight before succumbing to the imperatives of the real world – one in which people get sick, and old, and many who are perfectly decent and hardworking don't end up being independently wealthy.

The degree to which Ayn Rand has become a touchstone for the modern conservative movement is striking. She was a sexual libertine, and, according to writer Mark Ames, she modeled her heroic characters on one of the most despicable sociopaths of her time. Ames’ conclusion is important for understanding today’s political economy. “Whenever you hear politicians or Tea Partiers dividing up the world between ‘producers’ and ‘collectivism,’” he wrote, “just know that those ideas and words more likely than not are derived from the deranged mind of a serial-killer groupie....And when you see them taking their razor blades to the last remaining programs protecting the middle class from total abject destitution—Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid—and bragging about how they are slashing these programs for ‘moral’ reasons, just remember Rand’s morality and who inspired her.”

Now we know that Rand was also just as hypocritical as the Tea Party freshman who railed against “government health care” to get elected and then whined that he had to wait a month before getting his own Cadillac plan courtesy of the taxpayers.

But, as I note in my book, The Fifteen Biggest Lies About the Economy, that's par for the course. A central rule of the U.S. political economy is that people are attracted to the idea of “limited government” in the abstract—and certainly don’t want the government intruding in their homes—but they really, really like living in a society with adequately funded public services.

That's just as true for an icon of modern conservatism as it is for a poor mother getting public health care for her kids.

I get email.
Category: Blogging
I live in a neighborhood that has a small homeless population. One such person within that homeless group is known to the rest of us by her first name only. I can hear her now, outside my apartment. I'm told she lives in a kind of dilapidated garage of some sort, where she sleeps in a pile of blankets and debris. She often walks my street, collecting bottles and cans for the cash deposits. Whilst on her journeys, she often stops abruptly, plants both feet firmly to the ground and launches a kind of "external dialogue" with the world. She doesn't scream, but rather projects her voice with a powerful force.

Her chanting can literally be heard for blocks as she speaks directly to phantoms that only she can see. Sometimes she appears to be "lecturing" passersby with a hostile, throaty tone. It all comes out in a weird staccato rhythm, like a drill sergeant. Mostly, she's harmless and her monologues, indecipherable. This is the kind of obvious mental illness we can all recognize. But there are other forms of psychosis. And books such as "The Sociopath Next Door" by Martha Stout illuminate that fact clearly. Still, as I write this, the sound of our homeless inculcator strikes me as familiar. I am reminded of my first Ayn Rand girlfriend ARGF1, who's moods would alternate between states of overblown confidence and abject misery from time to time. When she was on one of her transient "highs", she would ad lib her own monologues, paraphrasing Ayn Rand's vituperative critiques on modern society with a bratty, flippant demeanor. ARGF1 was crazy too. She was a borderline.

I'm surprised that my little corner of Myspace gets the modest attention that it does. However, to my critics and others who would send me email defending Ayn Rand: let me be clear.

The main topic of this page is Borderline Personality Disorder and the reasons why the belief system of Ayn Rand appeals to certain individuals who exhibit traits of that psychological malady. The main topic of this page is not – I repeat NOT about the merits of Ayn Rand's "philosophy". Take a psychological perspective on what she said and how she acted in life. The available research on BPD is extensive, so I suggest that Rand's defenders who don't understand the disease should first read "Stop Walking on Eggshells" by Paul Mason and Randy Kreger. For a different take on the psychology of Objectivism, read Ellen Plasil's autobiography "Therapist", in which she chronicles how she was sexually molested by her Objectivist father when she was 11 years old and other horrific events that took place in the Randian subculture of her time. It is my opinion that Plasil's book is essential to understanding the cult-like phenomenon of Ayn Rand.

In so far as Rand's "philosophy" is referenced here, it serves mainly to reinforce the established and substantiated opinion that Ayn Rand probably did suffer from Borderline Personality Disorder. Her black & white / all or nothing / love & hate beliefs (including her narrow views on art and music) reveal her as a borderline pretty quickly to any person who has experienced a close relationship with a BPD partner. Apart from Rand's own tawdry personal story, it's also distinctly evident to me that her writings are expressions of BPD and therefore appeal to a certain borderline type, as my experiences and those of others have demonstrated. (I've been contacted by supportive readers who shared their stories of relationships with Randian borderlines.) It's very clear to me that Ayn Rand was a high functioning, manipulative and cunning sociopath (see: gaslighting, as the term relates to borderline pathology). She was also severely narcissistic and imperious. She was afflicted with multiple personality disorders (co-morbidity) and psychologically abused people within her social group, perhaps most cruelly her own husband. Evidence of her unbalanced psychology appears early in her life, as Michael Prescott has observed. This is not a case of a person "losing it" in her old age, although her psychological problems were magnified during that later time period.

I suggest that my critics crawl out of the fantasy world of "Galt's Gulch" and face the facts: Mental illness is real. Borderline Personality Disorder is real. Now take a fresh new look at your precious guru.

THERAPIST: A book that is testimony to Rand’s destructive legacy. I purchased a used copy of Therapist from Amazon. It deserves to be reprinted and perhaps someday a new edition will be published.

It's an engaging read, but disturbingly so. I actually had knots in my stomach while getting through it. In Therapist, author Ellen Plasil recounts in detail her experience as a patient with the Objectivist psychiatrist, Dr. Lonnie Leonard. Over the course of several years, Dr. Leonard psychologically manipulated, controlled and sexually abused the author and other women in his care. Years later, legal action was taken against Dr. Leonard, and some justice was procured for the victims.

Many of the doctor's patients were students of Objectivism, and it's unsettling how immured they were, as a group. The doctor's sex theories were highly informed by those of Ayn Rand, especially in regards to his interpretation of the so-called "ideal man" that Rand championed. Plasil says that she, along with other "students of Objectivism" were all blinded by the mechanism of Objectivist culture, where leaders of the movement possessed unchallenged authority, much like a cult. It was this culture that enabled the abuse.

"Whatever their source, there seemed to be rules of right and wrong for everything in Objectivism. There was more than just a right kind of politics and a right kind of moral code. There was also a right kind of music, a right kind of art, a right kind of interior design, a right kind of dancing. There were wrong books which we could not buy, and right ones which we should. Wrong books were written by "immoral" people whom we didn't want to support through our purchase; right books never were. There were plays we should not see, records we should not listen to, and movies we should not pay to watch. There were right ways to behave at parties, and right people to invite to them. And there were, of course, right psychotherapists. And on everything, absolutely everything, one was constantly being judged, just as one was expected to be judging everything around him. And if one was not judging everything that was around him, one was judged on that, too. It was a perfect breeding ground for insecurity, fear, and paranoia."

"The numbers of these blindly devoted went beyond coincidence. There was more to this than just a chance meeting of several dozen sheep all willing to follow their hero, their ideal man anywhere. Maybe the "hook" was in the lesson that if Objectivism was the right way, then being a student of objectivism made us more right than others. And for those of us who were not certain of our value to begin with, such superiority helped us ignore our self-evaluations and feed our egos.... Or maybe it was in Ayn Rand's incorporation of "hero-worship" into her representation of romantic love; show an Objectivist a hero and the hero has but to take command."

Therapist reveals the dark side of Objectivism like no other document can.

Why I created this page.
Narcissistic Personality Disorder and Borderline Personality Disorder; how I wish I had never heard of these two things!

And how I wish that I'd never heard of a person named Ayn Rand.

Actually, I'm reasonably confident that I never would have heard of that name until recently, if it were not for one person: I will call her Ayn Rand Girlfriend Number One, hereafter referred to as ARGF1.

I met ARGF1 about 1 year after graduating from college. I was in my first (and last) corporate job at the time, making decent money and trying to figure out what to do with myself. ARGF1 was slightly younger and had a troubled life. Her father was a recovered alcoholic and her parents were long divorced. I guess when she was about 15, she dropped out of high school and ran away to the state where her father lived. She slummed around, used drugs and ran with a group of punk rock kids. But when she needed money or food, her father's place was not far. Indicatively, she had very poor relations with both of her parents, especially her mother, whom she often spoke of in disparaging tones. Somewhere along the line, ARGF1 suffered from some kind of abuse. Parts of that dimension within her history were known to me, and others I surmised were either missing or suspect, because ARGF1 was a chronic prevaricator. Lies of omission were especially problematic with her. However, it was certain that something terrible did happen to ARGF1. I witnessed her trauma as she would break down in tears, unpredictably on several occasions. Other times she raged and her face morphed into the most ugly countenance I have ever seen, before or since. I realized that those incidents occurred because of triggers (unknown to me) that would cause her to act out. Those moments were frightening and unsettling. I didn't know it then, but ARGF1 had Borderline Personality Disorder. Clearly though, I did perceive that she had Narcissistic Personality Disorder and was unmistakably antisocial. My friends couldn't believe I was dating her. Nobody liked her, including my parents.

What was I thinking? Well, I have my own problems too! I'm working on those issues now. But, let's just say that in the past, I've taken on the role of the "rescuer" in certain relationships. Also, I honestly saw the good in ARGF1, even if others did not. Perhaps most significantly, at that time I was very young. During college, I never took a proper psychology class. I regret that now.

I mentioned before that ARGF1 was a high school drop out (she later earned her G.E.D. after she ran away). In this regard, she was low functioning and characteristically she also had trouble keeping jobs. The false identity that she fostered, both as a brash punk and an intrepid runaway appeared outwardly to indicate that she was independent. The opposite in fact, was true; she was needy, insecure, petty, histrionic and childish sometimes to the point of caricature. Somehow, she cultivated an image of herself that equated independence with intelligence. Her bookshelf was packed with second hand copies of things I knew she could not possibly have read, including books on complex subjects such as physics and mathematics. In actuality, when she enrolled at the local state university, she had to drop out of basic algebra because she was failing. She was intelligent on a certain level, however she was not book smart. Revealingly, she only really finished one specific group of books on that shelf. Indeed, she read and reread these particular books thoroughly and memorized her favorite passages from them, underlining the important sections for good measure. These were the books of Ayn Rand; The Fountainhead, Atlas Shrugged, We the Living, The Romantic Manifesto and lastly, a title so sensationally vulgar that it virtually insures book sales to the publisher – The Virtue of Selfishness.

I don't remember at what stage of the relationship I was introduced to them, but Ayn Rand's books were obviously important to ARGF1, so I reluctantly agreed to consider some of them. I wasn't a huge fan of fiction at the time, so I first chose to read The Virtue of Selfishness, since it was supposedly a summary of Rand's "philosophy" and it contained long passages from her fiction anyway. Now let me declare from the outset that I was immediately suspicious of this work, since ARGF1's behavior was already troubling, and if these books were informing her actions at the time, there must have been something weird about her exaggerated enthusiasm for them. Besides, as a recent graduate from an elite university with its subsequent required course work in English literature, I found it strange that I had never heard of this supposedly important author. My suspicions correctly reflected the general academic position on Ayn Rand: She was a prodigious hack who would never have been able to stand up to any kind of rigorous academic peer review process. This work was nothing more than pop philosophy and more importantly, it was dogma. To any reasonable sentient human being, the first few pages of The Virtue of Selfishness reveal the author as what she was: a hateful, pedantic, patronizing and arrogant pedagogue.

But people with Borderline Personality Disorder are not reasonable human beings. They are narcissists. When I tried to explain my objections to Ayn Rand's "philosophy", my concerns went right through one ear of ARGF1 and exited out the other side of her skull. It simply did not register. To ARGF1, Ayn Rand was good, all good and nothing but good. This hostile dichotomy of things that are either all good or all bad is in fact, a hallmark of Borderline Personality Disorder. Moreover, I think the ideas contained in The Virtue of Selfishness were interpreted by ARGF1 to justify her destructive behaviors. At times, Rand reads like a teenager who just discovered Friedrich Nietzsche. It's crass, unsophisticated and simplistic. But that's why it's so appealing to borderlines: It has often been written that borderlines stop their emotional development at an early age. While they may appear to be adults, emotionally, they are frightened children. Rand dresses her arguments in a kind of pseudo-intellectual aura, but really she appeals to ugly, base emotions. One of her favorite words repeated continuously in Atlas Shrugged is contempt. And contempt is what Ayn Rand exuded in virtually everything she wrote.

With welcome relief, I ended that relationship within a year. I heard through a mutual friend that ARGF1 had shacked up with another punk and consummated an even more turbulent relationship with him. They met at a punk club. It's my understanding that she cased after him when she caught a glimpse of the Ayn Rand quote he had scribbled on the back of his studded leather jacket. Sometimes borderlines are just like cartoon characters. It would be funny if it weren't so horrendous.

That was 17 years ago. I'd hoped to have forgotten Ayn Rand. But in later years I would meet another person that would throw me for a loop. Unlike ARGF1, she was extremely intelligent, talented and beautiful. I was in love. In the beginning, it was wonderful. But Ayn Rand and Borderline Personality Disorder would once again intrude upon my world. Thus begins my tale of Ayn Rand Girlfriend Number Two.

Update: For personal reasons, I have decided to post only minimal information regarding my former relationship with ARGF2. There is a post regarding Ayn Rand tattoos that covers the topic with brevity.

Mental illness is REAL.
They call them "invisible borderlines".

These are people who are "high functioning" and outwardly, they appear normal.

Inside however, there is emotional turmoil.

Control is what they need; control over their own feelings of inner shame, control over their significant others and family members.

Outwardly, they might exude self confidence, but during times when "the mask" is off, they often reveal an unusual and irrational fear of abandonment.
It is this constant fear of abandonment, always churning in the background that makes the whole thing so tragic and pernicious.

What this all has to do with Ayn Rand becomes clear when you get involved with one of her borderline fans.

Ayn Rand's books are MADE FOR BORDERLINES.

Let me explain. And may I submit that I am not jumping to conclusions here, but I am now convinced that there is a quantifiable, tangible CONNECTION between Ayn Rand's ideas and the characteristics of borderline personality disorder.
Twice in my life, I have been involved with BPD women that "discovered" the writings of Ayn Rand. The similarities of these two relationships, set years apart from one another are frighteningly striking. The cold, social darwinism championed by the hateful Ayn Rand appeals to the narcissistic side of the borderline. Also, the simplistic black and white solutions to EVERYTHING would seem perfectly necessary in the BPD's mind. Ayn Rand's portrayal of human beings as being either "all good" or "all bad" is 100% consistent with their views of all others and themselves. And a lack of empathy towards other people, so similar to what Rand preaches is a hallmark of borderline personality disorder.

Not convinced yet? If your BPD girlfriend has ALL THOSE BOOKS on her shelf, take a look at them closely, especially if the spines are worn (evidence of repeated readings). Look for the parts that she underlined. These passages are frightening glimpses into the mind of borderline. Remember, Ayn Rand herself was a diagnosed NPD and current research suggests that she had BPD also.

If you meet someone who claims that Ayn Rand has inspired them to new heights of philosophical awareness, be very, very concerned.

Why did Ayn Rand use Dexedrine?
This is interesting.

Consider this description of Dexedrine from Wikipedia:

"Dextroamphetamine is a powerful psychostimulant which produces increased wakefulness, energy and self-confidence in association with decreased fatigue and appetite."

Self-confidence?

Why did Ayn Rand need a drug to boost her self-confidence? She apparently held a negative view of her own body image. But her fans claim that she was the most confident person who ever lived.

Question: Did Ayn Rand even like herself...?

This is how Borderlines talk...
An exaggerated form of hero worship is one of the many hallmarks of BPD.

Consider these examples of quotes from Ayn Rand's most famous disciple, Nathaniel Branden.

"I had come to Ayn out of the void - and I imagined that without her a void was all that awaited me."

"I am in the first place I have ever felt at home in my entire life... a place where only good can happen and no harm can possibly come."

Borderlines often speak about their lives as being "voids"... They have a chronic feeling of emptiness. They attempt to fill that void by virtue of idolizing their significant other (for certain amount of time) until they "split" and devalue that person.

Editorial Reviews
From Publishers Weekly
[Dr.] Stout says that as many as 4% of the population are conscienceless sociopaths who have no empathy or affectionate feelings for humans or animals. As Stout (The Myth of Sanity) explains, a sociopath is defined as someone who displays at least three of seven distinguishing characteristics, such as deceitfulness, impulsivity and a lack of remorse. Such people often have a superficial charm, which they exercise ruthlessly in order to get what they want. Stout argues that the development of sociopathy is due half to genetics and half to nongenetic influences that have not been clearly identified. The author offers three examples of such people, including Skip, the handsome, brilliant, superrich boy who enjoyed stabbing bullfrogs near his family's summer home, and Doreen, who lied about her credentials to get work at a psychiatric institute, manipulated her colleagues and, most cruelly, a patient. Dramatic as these tales are, they are composites, and while Stout is a good writer and her exploration of sociopaths can be arresting, this book occasionally appeals to readers' paranoia, as the book's title and its guidelines for dealing with sociopaths indicate.

AYN RAND AND THE WORLD SHE MADE Anne C. Heller Anchor Biography
Hardcover: 9780385513999 Paperback: 9781400078936
Anne C. Heller acknowledges that “because [she was] not an advocate for Rand’s ideas, [she] was denied access to the Ayn Rand Papers at the Ayn Rand Institute.” By “advocate” she meant “idolater” since that is what is required of those who wish to gain access. But as well as being able to read many letters and papers not possessed by the Institute, she interviewed Rand’s still-living family and her ex-lover/first great protégée, Nathaniel Branden (born Nathan Blumenthal, a young man who at one time admired Ayn Rand so much that he changed his name to incorporate hers within it, a kind of marital custom in reverse), to discover much about the life of the highly controversial author.
Ayn Rand (born Alissa Rosenbaum in 1905) immigrated to the United States from Russia in her early 20s and quickly gained employment as a Hollywood screenwriter. She was nothing if not driven, believing she had a destiny as a great author. She used amphetamines to stay awake night and day to write both her best known books, THE FOUNTAINHEAD and ATLAS SHRUGGED. She sometimes taped a needle to her thumb so that if she lost focus, she could stick herself back to work. Rand espoused a philosophy that came to be called Objectivism and was symbolized by a U.S. dollar sign. Objectivism celebrated the total independence of all human beings, yet Rand was devastated when ATLAS SHRUGGED was, for the most part, panned by the reviewers. Paradoxically, it seemed that praise was the food she most craved, yet when people merely liked her work without espousing the ideas behind it, she was quick to label them fools and weaklings.

Heller takes a dispassionate view of Rand and, in this detailed portrait, seeks to reveal her as a whole person rather than the cardboard cutout swathed in legend created by the great lady herself. That Rand was Russian was known -- her accent proclaimed that --- but that she was Jewish was less acknowledged, especially since Rand made the claim that she had decided upon atheism by her early teens. Heller seeks to illustrate by many examples Rand's "Russianness" and her cultural "Jewishness." The biographer took care to disentangle the public image of Rand --- caped, clever and sometimes cruel --- from the private person, an enigma wrapped in a mystery and possibly driven more by personal fear than by public idealism.

No doubt, she was a genius who had many insightful ideas and could write a whale of a sexual romance. Her plots thickened exponentially, and even those who disagreed with her world view tired themselves out turning the pages of her giant tomes, keeping them on the bestseller lists despite critical disdain. Rand posited a world in which only productive, capitalistic people truly matter, the rest being slaves and underlings. She believed that only fiercely independent people can truly enjoy sex; in her own way, she was a proto-feminist and also anti-war, two banners that could have won her some admirers on the left. But she caustically rejected any devotion that was not total. Also, it is difficult to feel warm towards someone who characterizes altruism as the greatest possible evil, and that was Rand's absolute belief.

Reacting poorly to the world's failure to fall at her feet, and perhaps affected mentally by years of ingesting large numbers of dexadrine pills, Rand gradually fashioned herself into the legend she thought she deserved to be. Reading the book, I found myself thinking she was, by turns, either a high-functioning autistic, a psychotic, or a self-degraded drug addict, despite her genius and her occasional acts of kindness. She vilified nearly all of her early supporters (anyone who might have remembered her when she was not famous), dropping them in favor of a coterie of young admirers (who some would call sycophants). She never thanked anyone. She handily forgot her own missteps and recalled only her glory moments. Fiercely anti-communistic, she paradoxically played the role of a petty Stalin at the center of a clutch of young worshippers, staging psychologically destructive purges and lengthy show trials of those she identified as disloyal.

Surprisingly, however, her longest relationship, with her husband Frank O'Connor, exemplified, on his part, the quality she claimed most to despise: generosity of spirit. Hardly the sadistic, raging hero of her literary imaginings, he was passive yet protective, the opposite of what a "goddess" like Rand deserved. Frank defended her, cooked and cleaned for her, and did not protest over her affair of many years with a man some 30 years her junior conducted twice weekly in Frank's own bed. Rand's books have always sold well as each new generation "discovers" her. Young people, usually in their teens, take her philosophy to heart.

But, ultimately, her cold ideas lose their flavor, and most of her avid readers become as indifferent to her seductive speechifying as did her lover, Nathaniel Branden. By recanting his once hot ardor for all things Rand, he was cast into outer darkness, and an unknown young professor, Leonard Piekoff, inherited all of the author's considerable intellectual property. That was the beginning of the Rand Institute, the end of the open sharing of Objectivism, and the middle of what is proving to be a long story. Though she passed away in 1982 from lung cancer and loneliness for her dear, weak Frank, Ayn Rand's philosophy and the novels that proclaim it are getting more attention since the current recession took hold. That and the right wing's perception of the imminent threat of government takeovers comprise just the sort of scenario Rand would love to have been alive to scorn and struggle against.

Romancing the Stone-Cold Killer: Ayn Rand and William Hickman
by Michael Prescott
This essay is adapted from two posts I first published on my blog (www.michaelprescott.typepad.com). After writing this essay, I wrote a series of further posts on this topic, which can be read here, here, here, and here - or just go to the June page of my blog, where you can find all of these additional posts in one place. Some Ayn Rand fans discussed my thoughts regarding the Rand-Hickman matter on their message board; this discussion may be read here.

Part One: Ayn Rand's "real man" Recently I was rereading Scott Ryan's fascinating, albeit highly technical, critique of Ayn Rand's philosophy, Objectivism and the Corruption of Rationality, and getting a lot more out of it the second time, when I came across a fact culled from a posthumous collection of Rand's journal entries.

In her journal circa 1928 Rand quoted the statement, "What is good for me is right," a credo attributed to a prominent figure of the day, William Edward Hickman. Her response was enthusiastic. "The best and strongest expression of a real man's psychology I have heard," she exulted. (Quoted in Ryan, citing Journals of Ayn Rand, pp. 21-22.)

At the time, she was planning a novel that was to be titled The Little Street, the projected hero of which was named Danny Renahan. According to Rand scholar Chris Matthew Sciabarra, she deliberately modeled Renahan - intended to be her first sketch of her ideal man - after this same William Edward Hickman. Renahan, she enthuses in another journal entry, "is born with a wonderful, free, light consciousness -- [resulting from] the absolute lack of social instinct or herd feeling. He does not understand, because he has no organ for understanding, the necessity, meaning, or importance of other people ... Other people do not exist for him and he does not understand why they should." (Journals, pp. 27, 21-22; emphasis hers.)

"A wonderful, free, light consciousness" born of the utter absence of any understanding of "the necessity, meaning, or importance of other people." Obviously, Ayn Rand was most favorably impressed with Mr. Hickman. He was, at least at that stage of Rand's life, her kind of man.

So the question is, who exactly was he?

William Edward Hickman was one of the most famous men in America in 1928. But he came by his fame in a way that perhaps should have given pause to Ayn Rand before she decided that he was a "real man" worthy of enshrinement in her pantheon of fictional heroes.

You see, Hickman was a forger, an armed robber, a child kidnapper, and a multiple murderer.

Other than that, he was probably a swell guy.

In December of 1927, Hickman, nineteen years old, showed up at a Los Angeles public school and managed to get custody of a twelve-year-old girl, Marian (sometimes Marion) Parker. He was able to convince Marian's teacher that the girl's father, a well-known banker, had been seriously injured in a car accident and that the girl had to go to the hospital immediately. The story was a lie. Hickman disappeared with Marian, and over the next few days Mr. and Mrs. Parker received a series of ransom notes. The notes were cruel and taunting and were sometimes signed "Death" or "Fate." The sum of $1,500 was demanded for the child's safe release. (Hickman needed this sum, he later claimed, because he wanted to go to Bible college!) The father raised the payment in gold certificates and delivered it to Hickman. As told by the article "Fate, Death and the Fox" in crimelibrary.com,

"At the rendezvous, Mr. Parker handed over the money to a young man who was waiting for him in a parked car. When Mr. Parker paid the ransom, he could see his daughter, Marion, sitting in the passenger seat next to the suspect. As soon as the money was exchanged, the suspect drove off with the victim still in the car. At the end of the street, Marion's corpse was dumped onto the pavement. She was dead. Her legs had been chopped off and her eyes had been wired open to appear as if she was still alive. Her internal organs had been cut out and pieces of her body were later found strewn all over the Los Angeles area."

Quite a hero, eh? One might question whether Hickman had "a wonderful, free, light consciousness," but surely he did have "no organ for understanding ... the necessity, meaning, or importance of other people."

The mutilations Hickman inflicted on little Marian were worse than reported in the excerpt above. He cut the girl's body in half, and severed her hands (or arms, depending on the source). He drained her torso of blood and stuffed it with bath towels. There were persistent rumors that he molested the girl before killing her, though this claim was officially denied. Overall, the crime is somewhat reminiscent of the 1947 Black Dahlia case, one of the most gruesome homicides in L.A. history.

But Hickman's heroism doesn't end there. He heroically amscrayed to the small town of Echo, Oregon, where he heroically holed up, no doubt believing he had perpetrated the perfect crime. Sadly for him, fingerprints he'd left on one of the ransom notes matched prints on file from his previous conviction for forgery. With his face on Wanted posters everywhere, Hickman was quickly tracked down and arrested. The article continues:

"He was conveyed back to Los Angeles where he promptly confessed to another murder he committed during a drug store hold-up. Eventually, Hickman confessed to a dozen armed robberies. 'This is going to get interesting before it's over,' he told investigators. 'Marion and I were good friends,' he said, 'and we really had a good time when we were together and I really liked her. I'm sorry that she was killed.' Hickman never said why he had killed the girl and cut off her legs."

It seems to me that Ayn Rand's uncritical admiration of a personality this twisted does not speak particularly well for her ability to judge and evaluate the heroic qualities in people. One might go so far as to say that anyone who sees William Edward Hickman as the epitome of a "real man" has some serious issues to work on, and perhaps should be less concerned with trying to convert the world to her point of view than in trying to repair her own damaged psyche. One might also point out that a person who "has no organ for understanding ... the necessity, meaning, or importance of other people" is what we today would call a sociopath.

Was Rand's ideal man a sociopath? The suggestion seems shockingly unfair - until you read her very own words.

No doubt defenders of Ayn Rand, and there are still a few left, would reply that the journal entry in question was written when she was only in her early twenties and still under the spell of Nietzsche, that as her thinking developed she discarded such Nietzschean elements and evolved a more rational outlook, and that the mature Rand should not be judged by the mistakes of her youth. And this might be a perfectly reasonable position to take. Unquestionably Rand's outlook did change, and her point of view did become at least somewhat less hostile to what the average, normal person would regard as healthy values.

But before we assume that her admiration of Mr. Hickman was merely a quirk of her salad days, let's consider a few other quotes from Ayn Rand cited in Scott Ryan's book.
In her early notes for The Fountainhead: "One puts oneself above all and crushes everything in one's way to get the best for oneself. Fine!" (Journals, p. 78.)
Of The Fountainhead's hero, Howard Roark: He "has learned long ago, with his first consciousness, two things which dominate his entire attitude toward life: his own superiority and the utter worthlessness of the world." (Journals, p. 93.)
In the original version of her first novel We the Living: "What are your masses [of humanity] but mud to be ground underfoot, fuel to be burned for those who deserve it?" (This declaration is made by the heroine Kira, Rand's stand-in; it is quoted in The Ideas of Ayn Rand by Ronald Merrill, pp. 38 - 39; the passage was altered when the book was reissued years after its original publication.)
On the value of human life: Man "is man only so long as he functions in accordance with the nature of a rational being. When he chooses to function otherwise, he is no longer man. There is no proper name for the thing which he then becomes ... When a man chooses to act in a sub-human manner, it is no longer proper for him to survive nor to be happy." (Journals, pp. 253-254, 288.)
As proof that her Nietzschean thinking persisted long after her admirers think she abandoned it, this journal entry from 1945, two years subsequent to the publication of The Fountainhead: "Perhaps we really are in the process of evolving from apes to Supermen -- and the rational faculty is the dominant characteristic of the better species, the Superman." (Journals, p. 285.)
So perhaps her thinking did not change quite so much, after all.
And what of William Edward Hickman? What ever became of the man who served as the early prototype of the Randian Superman?
Real life is not fiction, and Hickman's personal credo, which so impressed Ayn Rand - "what is right for me is good" - does not seem to have worked out very well for him. At first he heroically tried to weasel out of the murder rap by implicating another man, but the intended fall guy turned out to have an airtight alibi (he was in prison at the time). Then he heroically invoked the insanity defense – the first use of this tactic in American history. This effort likewise failed, and in 1928 he was sentenced to death by hanging, to be carried out at San Quentin later that same year.
Hickman reportedly "died yellow" - he was dragged, trembling and fainting, to his execution, his courtroom bravado having given way at last.
Part Two: It just gets worse
After writing the above, I found myself questioning whether it was really possible that Ayn Rand admired William Edward Hickman, the child kidnapper and multiple murderer whose credo Rand quotes with unblinking approval in her journal. Although my opinion of Rand is very low, it has never been quite that low, and I was, after all, relying on secondhand sources. Not having a copy of Journals of Ayn Rand, I thought I was unable to check for myself. Then it occurred to me to use Amazon.com's "Search inside" feature to read the relevant pages.

What I found was, in some ways, actually worse than anything the brief excerpts from the journals had suggested.

Clearly the editor of Journals of Ayn Rand had some qualms about Rand's open admiration of Hickman. He tries to put this admiration into perspective, writing:

"For reasons given in the following notes, AR concluded that the intensity of the public's hatred was primarily 'because of the man who committed the crime and not because of the crime he committed.' The mob hated Hickman for his independence; she chose him as a model for the same reason.

"Hickman served as a model for [her fictional hero] Danny [Renahan] only in strictly limited respects, which AR names in her notes. And he does commit a crime in the story, but it is nothing like Hickman's. To guard against any misinterpretation, I quote her own statement regarding the relationship between her hero and Hickman:

" '[My hero is] very far from him, of course. The outside of Hickman, but not the inside. Much deeper and much more. A Hickman with a purpose. And without the degeneracy. It is more exact to say that the model is not Hickman, but what Hickman suggested to me.' "

The editor also provides the briefest and most detail-free synopsis of Hickman's crime possible: "He was accused of kidnapping and murdering a young girl. He was found guilty and sentenced to death in February of 1928; he was hanged on October 20, 1928."

As far as I can tell, this is the one and only reference to Hickman's victim to be found anywhere in the book. Ayn Rand never mentions the victim at all in any of her journal entries. The closest she comes is a sneering reference to another girl, "who wrote a letter to Hickman [in jail], asking him 'to get religion so that little girls everywhere would stop being afraid of him.'"

Notice that the editor does not bother to tell us that the victim in question was twelve years old, that Hickman tormented her parents with mocking ransom notes, that Hickman killed the girl even though the parents paid the ransom money, or that Hickman cut the girl in half and threw her upper body onto the street in front of her horrified father while scattering her other body parts around the city of Los Angeles.

This is the Hickman whose "outside" so intrigued the young Ayn Rand. Now here are some of Rand's notes on the fictional hero she was developing, with Hickman (or what he "suggested") as a model:

"Other people have no right, no hold, no interest or influence on him. And this is not affected or chosen -- it's inborn, absolute, it can't be changed, he has 'no organ' to be otherwise. In this respect, he has the true, innate psychology of a Superman. He can never realize and feel 'other people.' "

"He shows how impossible it is for a genuinely beautiful soul to succeed at present, for in all [aspects of] modern life, one has to be a hypocrite, to bend and tolerate. This boy wanted to command and smash away things and people he didn't approve of."

Apparently what Hickman suggested to Ayn Rand was "a genuinely beautiful soul." The soul of Marian Parker, the murdered girl, evidently did not suggest any comparably romantic notions to her.

As I mentioned in my previous post, there is a term for a person who has "no organ" by which to understand other human beings -- a person who "can never realize and feel 'other people.'" That word is sociopath. I mean this quite literally and not as a rhetorical flourish. A sociopath, by definition, is someone who lacks empathy and cannot conceive of other people as fully real. It is precisely because the sociopath objectifies and depersonalizes other human beings that he is able to inflict pain and death without remorse.

It is also fair to say of any sociopath that he "wanted to command and smash away things and people he didn't approve of." How this relates to having "a beautiful soul" is unclear to me -- and I earnestly hope it will continue to be.

In her notes, Rand complains that poor Hickman has become the target of irrational and ugly mob psychology:

"The first thing that impresses me about the case is the ferocious rage of a whole society against one man. No matter what the man did, there is always something loathsome in the 'virtuous' indignation and mass-hatred of the 'majority.'... It is repulsive to see all these beings with worse sins and crimes in their own lives, virtuously condemning a criminal...

"This is not just the case of a terrible crime. It is not the crime alone that has raised the fury of public hatred. It is the case of a daring challenge to society. It is the fact that a crime has been committed by one man, alone; that this man knew it was against all laws of humanity and intended that way; that he does not want to recognize it as a crime and that he feels superior to all. It is the amazing picture of a man with no regard whatever for all that society holds sacred, and with a consciousness all his own. A man who really stands alone, in action and in soul."

Before we get to the meat of this statement, let us pause to consider Rand's claim that average members of the public are "beings with worse sins and crimes in their own lives." Worse sins and crimes and kidnapping, murdering, and mutilating a helpless little girl? If Rand honestly believed that the average American had worse skeletons than that in his closet, then her opinion of "the average man" is even lower than I had suspected.

We get an idea of the "sins and crimes" of ordinary people when Rand discusses the jury in the case: "Average, everyday, rather stupid looking citizens. Shabbily dressed, dried, worn looking little men. Fat, overdressed, very average, 'dignified' housewives. How can they decide the fate of that boy? Or anyone's fate?"

Their sin, evidently, is that they are "average," a word that appears twice in three sentences. They are "shabbily dressed" or, conversely, "overdressed" -- in matters of fashion, Rand seems hard to please.

They are "dried" and "worn," or they are "fat." They are, in short, an assault on the delicate sensibilities of the author. Anything "average" appalls her. "Extremist beyond all extreme is what we need!" she exclaims in another entry. Well, in his cruelty and psychopathic insanity, Hickman was an extremist, for sure. Nothing "average" about him!

Returning to the longer quote above, notice how briskly Rand dismisses the possibility that the public's anger might have been motivated by the crime per se. Apparently the horrendous slaying of a little girl is not enough, in Rand's mind, to justify public outrage against the murderer. No, what the public really objects to is "a daring challenge to society." I suppose this is one way of looking at Hickman's actions. By the same logic, Jack the Ripper and Ted Bundy posed "a daring challenge to society." So did Adolf Hitler, only on a larger scale.

Hickman, she writes, knew that his crime "was against all laws of humanity" -- this is a point in his favor, she seems to think. And "he does not want to recognize it as a crime." Well, neither does any criminal who rationalizes his behavior by saying that his victim "had it coming." Hickman "feels superior to all." Yes, so do most sociopaths. Grandiosity and narcissistic self-absorption are another characteristic of this personality type. Hickman has "a consciousness all his own"; he is a "man who really stands alone, in action and in soul." I cannot think of any comment about this that would be suitable for public consumption.

Although the American people showed no sympathy for Hickman, Ayn Rand certainly did:

"And when we look at the other side of it -- there is a brilliant, unusual, exceptional boy turned into a purposeless monster. By whom? By what? Is it not by that very society that is now yelling so virtuously in its role of innocent victim? He had a brilliant mind, a romantic, adventurous, impatient soul and a straight, uncompromising, proud character. What had society to offer him? A wretched, insane family as the ideal home, a Y.M.C.A. club as social honor, and a bank-page job as ambition and career...

"If he had any desires and ambitions -- what was the way before him? A long, slow, soul-eating, heart-wrecking toil and struggle; the degrading, ignoble road of silent pain and loud compromises....

"A strong man can eventually trample society under his feet. That boy was not strong enough. But is that his crime? Is it his crime that he was too impatient, fiery and proud to go that slow way? That he was not able to serve, when he felt worthy to rule; to obey, when he wanted to command?...

"He was given [nothing with which] to fill his life. What was he offered to fill his soul? The petty, narrow, inconsistent, hypocritical ideology of present-day humanity. All the criminal, ludicrous, tragic nonsense of Christianity and its morals, virtues, and consequences. Is it any wonder that he didn't accept it?"

How exactly she knew that Hickman was "brilliant, unusual, exceptional," or that he "had a brilliant mind, a romantic, adventurous, impatient soul and a straight, uncompromising, proud character" is far from clear. A more realistic portrait of Hickman would show him as a calculating sadist.

For all those who assume that Ayn Rand, as a figure on the political right, would be "tough on crime," please note that she here invokes the hoariest cliches of the "victim of society" mentality. Poor Hickman just couldn't help kidnapping and murdering a little girl -- after all, he had a lousy home life and an unfulfilling job. And it would be asking too much of such a superior soul to put forth the long, sustained effort necessary to rise to a position of power and influence by means of his own hard work.

Rand's statement here reminds me very much of an attitude often found in career criminals -- that honest work is for suckers.

"A strong man can eventually trample society under his feet." This is about as bald-faced a confession of Rand's utter dependence on Nietzsche as we are ever likely to see. "That boy was not strong enough. But is that his crime?" No, Ayn Rand, that was not his crime. His crime, in case you have forgotten, is that he kidnapped a twelve-year-old girl and held her for ransom and murdered her and cut her to pieces and threw her body parts in the street and laughed about it. That was his crime. True, he did not quite "trample society under his feet" -- but it was not for want of trying.

Oh, but "he was not able to serve, when he felt worthy to rule; to obey, when he wanted to command." How sad for him. There is a point in most people's lives -- usually around the age of fifteen or sixteen -- when they reject authority and want to rule and command. Rand apparently feels that this adolescent hubris represents the best in human nature. A less addled personality would recognize that it represents a passing phase in one's personal development, a phase that a mature human being has long outgrown.

But of course we know the real villain in the picture. Not Hickman, but Christianity! More specifically, "All the criminal, ludicrous, tragic nonsense of Christianity and its morals, virtues, and consequences. Is it any wonder that he didn't accept it?" So it is Christianity that is characterized as "criminal," just as it is average Americans who are excoriated for their "sins and crimes."

In case there is any doubt as to Rand's position vis-a-vis Christianity, a few pages later we find her fulminating against the depravity of:

"... the pastors who try to convert convicted murderers to their religion... The fact that right after his sentence Hickman was given a Bible by the jailer. I don't know of anything more loathsome, hypocritical, low, and diabolical than giving Bibles to men sentenced to death. It is one of those things that's comical in its stupidity and horrid because of this lugubrious, gruesome comedy."

I can think of at least one thing that is "more loathsome ... low, and diabolical than giving Bibles to men sentenced to death." And that is: ripping up little girls for fun and profit.

Incidentally, given Hickman's claim that he ransomed his victim in order to pay for Bible college, the jailer's decision to hand the condemned man a copy of the Good Book seems like poetic justice to me.

Defending her hero, Rand asks rhetorically:
"What could society answer, if that boy were to say: 'Yes. I am a monstrous criminal, but what are you?' "
Well, society could answer: We are the ones who caught you, tried you, convicted you, and are going to put you to death. Or more seriously: We are the ones charged with upholding all those "laws of humanity" that you chose to violate – and now, dear Willie, you must pay the price.
At times, Rand -- who, we must remember, was still quite young when she wrote these notes -- appears to be rather infatuated with the famous and charismatic boy killer. She offers a long paragraph listing all the things she likes about Hickman, somewhat in the manner of a lovestruck teenager recording her favorite details about the lead singer in a boy band. Rand's inventory includes:
"The fact that he looks like 'a bad boy with a very winning grin,' that he makes you like him the whole time you're in his presence..."
You can practically hear the young aspiring author's heart fluttering. I have always been puzzled by the psychology of women who write love letters to serial killers in prison. Somehow I suspect Ayn Rand would have understood them better than I do.
Still writing of Hickman, she confesses to her "involuntary, irresistible sympathy for him, which I cannot help feeling just because of [his antisocial nature] and in spite of everything else."
Regarding his credo (the full statement of which is, "I am like the state: what is good for me is right"), Rand writes, "Even if he wasn't big enough to live by that attitude, he deserves credit for saying it so brilliantly."
Remember all the flak taken by Norman Mailer for championing a jailhouse writer and getting the guy paroled, only to have him commit another crime? Here we have Rand enthusing about the "credit" Hickman "deserves" for expressing his twisted philosophy of life "so brilliantly." Get that man on a work release program!
At one point, a sliver of near-rationality breaks through the fog of Rand's delusions: "I am afraid that I idealize Hickman and that he might not be this at all. In fact, he probably isn't." Her moment of lucidity is short-lived. "But it does not make any difference. If he isn't, he could be, and that's enough." Yes, facts are stubborn things, so it's best to ignore them and live in a land of make-believe. Let's not allow truculent reality to interfere with our dizzying and intoxicating fantasy life.
Punctuating the point, Rand writes, "There is a lot that is purposely, senselessly horrible about him. But that does not interest me..." No indeed. Why should it? It's only reality.
By the appraisal of any normal mind, there can be little doubt that William Edward Hickman was a vicious psychopath of the worst order. That Ayn Rand saw something heroic, brilliant, and romantic in this despicable creature is perhaps the single worst indictment of her that I have come across. It is enough to make me question not only her judgment, but her sanity.

At this point in my life, I did not think it was possible to significantly lower my estimate of Ayn Rand, or to regard her as even more of a psychological and moral mess than I had already taken her to be.
I stand corrected.

IF The ARRL want to have a real "Voice" at the Table in Congress and at the FCC :Then they have to be as 'smart' as the other "Players" in the Washington, DC Political 'Action' {Power} Game.

Look At Success : Look at the NRA Political Victory
Fund (NRA-PVF) : http://www.nrapvf.org/

You have and build your 'basic' ARRL Membership
-roughly- 155,000 ARRL Members
http://www.arrl.org/membership

+ Plus you have to have and build a supporting {Independent} "Voice of Amateur Radio" PAC Fund

The ARRL has enough Members who are Lawyers set-up and make a "Voice of Amateur Radio" PAC Fund Do-Able and Work-Able -so- Just Do It !

Encourage Each ARRL Member to make a Matching {Voluntary} Contribution to the "Voice of Amateur Radio" [VoAR] PAC Fund
-so- Take the 155,000 ARRL Members
-by- $5 = $775,000 VoAR-PAC Fund : Figure about 20% for a Part-Time Lobbyist and leaves around
$1000 in 'political' contributions per Member of Congress
-by- $10 = $1,555,000 VoAR-PAC Fund : Figure about 20% for a Part-Time Lobbyist and leaves around $2000
in 'political' contributions per Member of Congress

? Is Your Amateur [Ham] Radio "Hobby" Worth an Extra $5 to $10 per Year To You For A Seat At The Table of Congress and the FCC in Washington, DC ?

Promote the "Voice of Amateur Radio" PAC Fund to the American Public and the Corporate World Git Them To Become Sponsors and Underwriters of the "Voice of Amateur Radio" PAC Fund too.

Then Use the "Voice of Amateur Radio" PAC Fund Money to Lobby Congress and the FCC to ensure Fairness and Equal Treatment for Amateur Radio in Congress and Before the FCC.

It's All Legal & It's All Good - it's very smart too ~ RHF
REALITY CHECK : WITH ONLY 155,000 MEMBERS
THE ARRL HAS THREE GOALS :
1st : Build Membership and Increase the Number of Hams

2nd : Build Membership and Increase the Number of Hams
-or-lose-spectrum-and-vanish-from-the-air-waves-

The NRA has spun off an entire "separate" organization to do that, since the tax status of the basic organization doesn't allow it.

The NRA also has about 4 million members; how many does ARRL have?

BPL has NOT "gone through."

The ARRL DOES lobby in D.C. - Chwat & Co., Alexandria,VA
Plus direct HQ access to the FCC commissioners and staff.

Your contributions are regularly requested, plus the most effective, personal letters to our representatives.

"non-profit" organizations do have restrictions on how money is spent,
e.g. no money to political campaigns, etc.

W5MTV --- Hence "Look At {Better} Success" :
Look at the NRA Political Victory
Fund (NRA-PVF) : http://www.nrapvf.org/

The Are More and Bigger Challenges To Amateur Radio Then Just BPL : Such As Lose of RF Spectrum and Radio Bands.
http://www.arrl.org/files/file/Hambands_color.pdf

Simple Fact : With just 155,000 Members the ARRL is a relatively 'small' Constituency Group for anyone Congressman or Senator; and the US Congress as a whole; as contrasted to :
* NRA ~ 4 Million Members [25X ARRL]
* AARP ~ 40 Million Members [250X ARRL]
Both of Which Claim To Be "Non-Profit" Organizations too...

Again I Simply Posse The Question :
Why-Not ? : A "Voice of Amateur Radio" PAC Fund !
